Harbor Un-Sealed Before Harbor Unsealed

Miss C Delays Big Bang

By AGNES FLETT
KYUQUOT—They finally found Miss Charlie, and the big rock at the mouth of the harbor here is gone.

Fifteen tons of high explosives Friday blasted out a rock at the harbor mouth. Fishermen have cursed the rock for years.

When the rubble is cleared in 10 days the harbor will be open to boats around the clock, instead of just at high tide. There will be 15 feet of water, even at low tide.

Groceries may even cost a little less. Supplies which had to be off-loaded by barge can now be brought in direct to the government wharf.

Kyuquot is the second largest fishing centre on the Island. About 100 boats tie up here.

Drilling the rock to place explosives took six weeks. The job, which will have cost $80,000 when finished, is paid for by the federal government.

The blast would have been touched off a week earlier had it not been for Miss Charlie.

Residents insisted on catching Miss Charlie to keep her safe when the blast went off, but it was a week before she could be rounded up.

Miss Charlie, the town's pet, is a half-tame seal.

Negroes Urged: Dodge Draft

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Mississippi's Selective Service director said Saturday he has asked the Justice Department to look into an appeal circulated by a militant civil rights group calling on Negro mothers to urge their sons to be draft dodgers. (See also Page 1.)

Col. James L. Davis, the head of the draft in Mississippi, said he had forwarded the printed appeal to the U.S. attorney's office here.

"I'm shocked," said Col. Davis, adding that similar incidents had resulted in convictions. He declined to elaborate.

"Negroes should not honor the draft here in Mississippi," said a newsletter printed by the Freedom Democratic Party, a largely Negro group.

Lawrence Guyot, executive secretary of the party, hurried back to Jackson from the Mississippi Gulf Coast Saturday after the newsletter had been publicized Friday.

He said the party's executive committee neither condoned nor condemned the appeal.

Mr. Guyot said the newsletter was an official organ of the party.

He said he would welcome any investigation. He would not say if the executive committee planned to take formal action on the matter.

Today most of the south coastal woods are closed by government order to industry and the public. Fire watchers intensified their vigil on the parched forests, where humidity has dropped to the vanishing point.

An estimated 5,000 loggers have been put out of work by the forest closure.

65 DEGREES
The temperature in downtown Victoria was probably upward of 90 as the thermometer touched 80 at Gonzales Observatory shortly after 3 p.m. Saturday.

The weather station has always been five to 12 degrees cooler than the downtown area.

The previous record for July 31 was 88.1 degrees, set in 1939.

BROKEN AGAIN
It was the second time in three days that the record was broken. On Thursday the thermometer reached 83.1 degrees, eclipsing the 1947 level of 77.7.

Montreal Postal Deadlock May Be Over on Monday

MONTREAL (CP)—Montreal postal workers doggedly continued their strike during the weekend amidst indications that the deadlock may end Monday.

Strike headquarters announced Saturday that a general meeting of strikers had been called for Monday. Union officials declined to specify its purpose.

INTERIM REPORT
But there seemed to be a definite feeling around headquarters that an interim report may be forthcoming by Monday from Judge J. C. Anderson.

Judge Anderson was appointed conciliator by the federal government following the walkout that began July 22 and at one time included postal workers in Vancouver, Toronto and other centres in British Columbia and Ontario as well as Quebec.

The fact that a general meeting has been called appeared significant in itself.

CHANGE IN ATTITUDE
As late as Friday William Houle, Montreal president of the Canadian Postal Employees' Association, said following a meeting of strike leaders with the government that there was no reason to summon a general meeting of the strikers.

Prior to the announcement of Monday's meeting, Mr. Houle said:

"We are just waiting for the news. I think it is likely that ATHENS, Greece (AP)—King Constantine's 18-day-old crisis government defied its foes Saturday and said it would make a final attempt to win a confidence vote.

Dorsal Fin Drooping

Expert Claims Whale Will Die Before Long

SEATTLE (CP)—An expert on aquatic animals said Saturday the world's only captive killer whale is not long for this world.

Ivan Toros, producer of the television show Flipper, said 22-foot Namu needs space to roam as well as companionship, and won't last long in his pen.

Mr. Toros said Namu's dorsal fin is drooping, and this is a sign the four-ton sea-going mammal is unhappy.

Namu hasn't eaten since Tuesday, but Seattle aquarium owner, Ted Griffin, who bought Namu from two Canadian fishermen, said he isn't worried about it yet.

Mr. Griffin said he is more worried that people don't seem to want to pay $1.50 to see Namu doing slow rolls in his plastic-lined pen.

"I won't know until Monday exactly what I plan to do," he said.

Mr. Griffin said he may move Namu to Tacoma or Everett, or even turn him loose if interest doesn't pick up.

His investment in Namu runs into thousands of dollars. He paid $1,000 just to get the whale from two Nantux, B.C., fishermen who trapped the animal in the harbor of the fishing community 280 miles upcoast from Vancouver.

Communist civil war shook the country between 1947 and 1949. The 25-year-old king gave no indication of retreating before his ousted premier, George Papandreu, 77.

Constantine conferred briefly with his premier, George Athanasiadis Novas, Saturday morning. The premier's top minister, Constantine Stephanis, announced that Parliament will reconvene Monday.

"Whether the speaker of the House, Emmanuel Bakatzis, likes it or not."

SUSPENDED
Bakatzis, a Papandreu follower, ordered Parliament indefinitely suspended Friday night, after an uproarious session, because a quorum was not present due to a boycott by opponents of the government.

He said lack of a quorum indicated "disapproval of the government."

Athanasiadis Novas gave no hint what might happen Monday if a quorum still was lacking.

CAPITAL BOILS
The Greek capital boiled with rumors of possible next moves. There was talk the king might seek a compromise premier, or call new elections, or even impose martial law with a military government.

One rumor had a secret meeting of Constantine Athanasiadis Novas and top Greek generals and admirals following Friday night's parliamentary tumult.

Deserted Wives Wait, Turn to Welfare

Family Court Bogs Down

By A. H. MURPHY

First of Two Parts

More than 125 deserted wives are awaiting hearing of their cases in Family and Children's Court and some of them will not be heard for four months.

This means that a woman, whose husband has left her and who is destitute, has no money and the court considers her case and makes out a maintenance order against her husband.

She has no alternative. She goes on welfare.

And for the time the court goes on to her side the husband may be a thousand miles away — and often is.

And that's not all. Desertion cases are often complex and nearly always highly charged with emotion. Some of them take a long time to hear.

A case may be called for a certain day and all parties present. Because the preceding case takes longer than anticipated the principals may hang around all day only to learn at four or five o'clock that they will have to return on the following day.

It's not easy on the subject.

A senior official of the court says that if people were treated like that in a department store their streams of rage would be heard all the way up to the manager's office.

"However, most of these people are so filled with confusion and guilt that they say nothing," he added.

A report, prepared for the Family and Children's Court Committee by Senior Probation Officer Bruce E. McLean, gives some of the reasons for the delay.

Since the court's inception in 1950 there have been more than 100 orders made under the Wives' and Children's Maintenance Act.

If, over the order is made, no further contact with the husband and wife is necessary, it would be relatively simple, the report points out. However, many cases have to be referred to court because of changed circumstances or because the husband avoids responsibility.

As more orders are made each year, more cases come back to the court for enforcement and often such trials take as much time and effort as the original hearing.

This whole situation is aggravated, of course, by the fact that the Family Court also has the whole juvenile delinquency court problem on its shoulders. With a rising delinquency rate and an expanding population this, in itself, is a burden for the court as it is now constituted.

The Family and Children's Court Act came into force in July, 1963 and its provisions allow the probation staff to try

Target: Ravages Of Diet

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Agency for International Development has announced plans to help save 200,000,000 children in overpopulated areas from the ravages of malnutrition.

The children are in less developed countries where the Food for Peace program, while getting good results, does not attack protein and other nutritional deficiencies which can cause permanent physical and mental retardation.

No nations were named, but officials said A.I.D. missions were being asked to suggest pilot programs for children up to six years of age, the chief sufferers.

ENRICHMENT
The programs would include: bolstering child food industries; enrichment of local food supply; shift in emphasis in Food for Peace child feeding from calorie to active participation through nutrition, gardening and other community-based activities in agriculture, food processing, health education, home economics, child care and dietetics; and creation of community nutrition committees.

An A.I.D. message to the mission said that correcting protein deficiencies in preschool children "would make a greater contribution to a nation's development than many other health measures, such as malaria eradication."

Snub Revolver

Whites Strike Negroes

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP)—Two young Negroes were struck, one by a snub-nosed revolver, as about 30 white men broke up a demonstration by an equal number of Negroes Saturday.

The Negro struck with the pistol was identified as Denay LeNow, 21, a student at Midland College in Wisconsin. LeNow, working this summer with a voter registration group, was taken to a hospital bleeding from the head.

The other injured demonstrator was identified as Sammy Mohone, 19, of Americus, a field worker for the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee.

A witness said several Negroes were slugged with fists during the outbreak. State troopers escorted two white men from the scene then escorted demonstrators back to a Negro section of town.

The incident came minutes before the funeral for Andrew A. Whitley, a 21-year-old white man shot from a passing car near midnight Wednesday. Two Negroes are charged with murder in his death.

Witnesses said the Negroes tried Saturday to enter a downtown food market, but were blocked by white employees who hastily locked the doors.

As the Negroes began to chant and sing in front of the store, a group of white men gathered. Witnesses said that was some jeering by both groups before a white man pulled a revolver from his pocket and slugged one of the demonstrators.

About an hour earlier, 19 Negroes and three white persons entered a supermarket. They were locked inside, and a handwritten sign hung on the door said: "Closed temporarily to preserve order."

Earlier Negroes disregarded appeals for a cooling-off period and picketed white merchants as police patrolled downtown streets.

White and Negro shoppers, however, went about their business and apparently gave scant heed to signs carried by about 15 young Negroes in front of white businesses. "Don't buy here," the signs urged.

Every attempt is made to schedule cases so that prosecutors from the four municipalities—Victoria, Oak Bay, Saanich and Esquimalt—and the prosecutor from the RCMP detachment know when their services are required. However, for one reason or another, it is not unusual to have three or more prosecutors waiting most of the afternoon for their respective cases to be heard.

This, as the report states, is inefficient and costly use of the prosecutors' time.

However, the panorama is not unrelievedly gloomy. There are bright spots on the horizon and a promise of better things to come.

The provincial government has indicated that soon there will be a full-time family court judge for day-long sessions instead of the present half-day hearings.

Already the government has taken steps to institute morning hearings until a more permanent arrangement can be made.

And, after years of delay and procrastination, the municipalities are moving toward a new court house and improved facilities. The intermunicipal committee recently recommended that member councils allocate $2,000 toward a general survey to indicate the type of new building needed. This, almost certainly, will be implemented and it is quite likely that it will be erected on Cook Street.

Youths Charged After Fight

PRINCETON (CP)—Five Mission teen-agers have been charged after an RCMP constable and two would-be helpers were beaten and harassed on a highway six miles west of here.

The charges include impaired driving, obstructing a police officer, assault, assaulting a police officer, illegal possession of liquor and intoxication.

They were laid after Const. Barry Tarr, 21, Thursday night stopped a car containing six teenagers to question the driver as an impaired driving suspect.

RCMP said the constable was attacked, pushed to the ground and held until he fought free.

Guy Thibert, 19, a hitchhiker in the stopped car, was beaten when he went to the policeman's aid, RCMP said.

A trucker who tried to assist Const. Tarr, Kenneth Wing of Castlegar, was kicked and punched, requiring hospital treatment, RCMP said.

A passing motorist eventually summoned RCMP reinforcements, who arrested three teenagers at the scene, and two others in nearby husband. RCMP said they also seized two bottles of liquor.

Business companies in Montreal feel a crisis is ahead unless the strike is quickly settled.

Mail-order firms, said an officer of one, "are being slaughtered."

As the strike appeared headed for a climax there were indications, too, that in Montreal it has burgeoned into something of a crusade for better working conditions as well as salaries and that the Montreal business community is growing from the effects of no mail service.

Mr. Houle said in an interview that "the fighting spirit of postal workers in Montreal and elsewhere in Canada does not stem primarily from a need for an increase in salary."

"We were driven to it by conditions that have long been intolerable."

He said the demand for a yearly salary increase of $600 was made the focal point "because we wanted the government to deal with us as a legitimate union" and that to talk then about conditions would have merely "confused things."

Lose 10-15 Lbs. A Month On New Air Force Diet

Often Called The Drinking Man's Diet

WASHINGTON, D.C. (Special)—This is the revolutionary new low-carbohydrate diet that everyone is suddenly talking about. It is known variously as the Air Force Diet, the Astronaut's Diet, the Airline Pilot's Diet, and some of the more popular names as the Drinking Man's Diet. In effect, it allows you to drink all the liquor you want, enjoy formerly "forbidden" foods such as big steaks trimmed with fat, rich gravies, mayonnaise, lobster swimming in butter, bacon, fat, sausages and scrambled eggs, and still lose 10-15 lbs. a month. This is the one diet that really works. Senators in Washington, D.C., and Members of Parliament in Ottawa, Canada, report losing 40 to 50 pounds with ease. Women report equally startling results. Calories count, but in this diet, what you do is count your carbohydrate grams, and limit your starch and sugar intake to 50 grams daily. The reason for this is simple. When your body doesn't burn up all starches and sugars you eat, the excess carbohydrates quickly turn into unhealthy fat. On a low carbohydrate diet your body is forced to call on its own fat (stored carbohydrates) for energy and thus you lose fat. The fat is gone and you will cease to lose weight, and your weight will remain constant. Counting your carbohydrate grams is a manual task. The carbohydrate content of over 1,500 foods and 50 alcoholic beverages are given in the manual rules to follow this new diet. It also gives typical low-gram menus that are every bit as pleasant as not dieting at all. The new Air Force diet manual was primarily designed for Air Force personnel to keep in fighting trim. But it has proven to be more than that. It has proven to be a good diet for people who hate dieting—who find salad without dressing unbearable, eggs without bacon unpalatable, dinner without martini civilized, in short, if you like to live well and have a weight problem, this new diet manual will change your life, as it has for thousands of others. Recently published as a private edition in Canada, the diet manual can now be obtained by sending $3 to AIR FORCE DIET, Room 214, 22 King Street East, Toronto 1. Unconditional money-back guarantee. If after trying the diet for 30 days you have not lost 10-15 lbs., simply return the diet manual and your $3 (plus postage) will be refunded promptly and without argument. Tear out this message as a reminder. Decide now to regain the trim attractive figure of your youth—while still enjoying hearty breakfasts, lunches and dinners—and drinking all the liquor you want. Order now before others snap up the limited supply.

WASHINGTON, D.C. (Special)—This is the revolutionary new low-carbohydrate diet that everyone is suddenly talking about. It is known variously as the Air Force Diet, the Astronaut's Diet, the Airline Pilot's Diet, and some of the more popular names as the Drinking Man's Diet. In effect, it allows you to drink all the liquor you want, enjoy formerly "forbidden" foods such as big steaks trimmed with fat, rich gravies, mayonnaise, lobster swimming in butter, bacon, fat, sausages and scrambled eggs, and still lose 10-15 lbs. a month. This is the one diet that really works. Senators in Washington, D.C., and Members of Parliament in Ottawa, Canada, report losing 40 to 50 pounds with ease. Women report equally startling results. Calories count, but in this diet, what you do is count your carbohydrate grams, and limit your starch and sugar intake to 50 grams daily. The reason for this is simple. When your body doesn't burn up all starches and sugars you eat, the excess carbohydrates quickly turn into unhealthy fat. On a low carbohydrate diet your body is forced to call on its own fat (stored carbohydrates) for energy and thus you lose fat. The fat is gone and you will cease to lose weight, and your weight will remain constant. Counting your carbohydrate grams is a manual task. The carbohydrate content of over 1,500 foods and 50 alcoholic beverages are given in the manual rules to follow this new diet. ## Wilson Faces Attack

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Wilson, girding for his first clash Monday with Edward Heath, the new Conservative leader, faced a flank attack from the left wing of his own Labor party.

William Warbey, a 61-year-old Laborite maverick, astonished the government Friday night by demanding Wilson's resignation, contending that he had broken election pledges.

Warbey, who has paid several visits to North Viet Nam, has been a strong critic of Wilson's policy of support for the U.S. in the Viet Nam war.

"NONSENSE"

He accused the prime minister of reneging on election promises about a national income guarantee for old persons, cheaper housing mortgages and a new initiative for world peace.

The Labor party's parliamentary manager, Edward Short, retorted that Warbey was "talking a lot of nonsense as he does frequently. . . . He should resign his seat and fight as an independent."

Saturday, Warbey told reporters:

"I believe there are about 80 (Labor) backbenchers who feel as I do."

BACKING EXPECTED

"Although I have not yet heard of any active support I would imagine that a handful of my colleagues will follow my example on Monday and abstain from voting in the censure debate unless Mr. Wilson stands down (resigns)."

Warbey's announced intention of abstaining would reduce Wilson's basic balloting edge for Monday's crucial vote to only two.

Coeds' Deaths Spur Queries

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — State and local officers had few answers Saturday to a long list of baffling questions as the search spread in the slayings of two campus beauties.

Crime detection experts said, after a six and one-half-hour autopsy, that Susan Rigaby, 21, of Dallas, died of strangulation, with a faint mark or hand left around her neck.

The cause of death for Shirley Ann Stark, also 21 and from Dallas, is "inconclusive" at the present time, said Justice of Peace Jerry Dellana, who is conducting the inquest.

Meanwhile, at Chapel Hill, N.C., police sought a young Negro for questioning in the stabbing death of Surlen Evans, 21, a home economics student, on the campus of the University of North Carolina.

In St. Paul, Minn., a father of two children confessed to the slaying of 14-year-old baby-sitter Barbara Iversen June 9, then forcing his wife to help him bury the body beside a country road near their home.

Minneapolis police reported the discovery of the body of a teen-aged girl on the floor of a second-storey room in an abandoned house. Police said the girl appeared to be 14 or 15 years old and had been criminally assaulted.

Healthier Future For Civil Service?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The new head of Canada's civil service says that collective bargaining will produce a much healthier relationship between the government and its employees.

John J. Carson of Vancouver, named Friday to head the commission, said in an interview that this is one of the reasons why he accepted Prime Minister Pearson's invitation to take the job.

"I feel very strongly that the civil service is at an important stage in its development," he said. "The advent of collective bargaining and the government's intention to implement a number of important recommendations of the Glasco royal commission are going to bring considerable changes to the public service in Canada."

Mr. Carson, 45, as a member of the commission conducted a probe of manpower management in the civil service between 1961 and 1963 and wrote much of the first instalment of the three-part commission report.

He said the Liberal government committed itself in 1963 to giving civil servants the right to bargain collectively and added that collective bargaining "will make it an effective, efficient service."

"And it will result in civil servants having more in common with other Canadians in comparable jobs."

Military Follow-Up Johnson Conference

WASHINGTON (AP) — A of bombs Saturday night on a North Vietnamese ammunition dump, inflicting heavy damage, a U.S. spokesman reported Sunday.

The four American F104 jets and 10 Vietnamese propeller-driven Skyraiders left the buildings at Xom Rung, 75 miles northwest of the border, either destroyed or extensively damaged, the spokesman said.

The raid highlighted an evening of steady air activity against North Viet Nam.

SAIGON (UPI)—It was disclosed here Saturday that at least 65 members of a Communist-controlled gang defected to government troops. Officials said as many as 200 members may have defected from the notorious bandit gang called the "White Turbans."

Shape Up Trim Down Or Ship Out

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Motor Maids are going to have to shape up, trim down or ship out.

Such is the sentiment of traffic commissioner Henry Barnes who has established a weighty precedent by firing female parking meter inspectors who have bulging figures. Herbert S. Bauch, Teamster Union representative for the Motor Maids, Friday charged that Barnes has fired six commendably curvy probationary maids and has sternly warned four others to reduce or resign. Barnes said they ignored repeated admonitions from his office that their plumpness was not an asset to the force.

Crime in Canada

RECENT REPORTS show that criminal activities across Canada have taken a dangerous upswing in the past few years in almost every category of public offence ranging from relatively minor misdemeanours committed by individuals to the more serious law-breaking operations run by international organized crime rings trading in vice and corruption.

In the past twelve months alone three major Canadian metropolitan centres—Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg—have openly admitted that organized crime under foreign management has become big business in their communities.

Nor should it be assumed because of these frank revelations that this big business of organized crime is restricted to these major population areas. On the contrary, there is ample proof that its tentacles spread throughout Canada—even into the heart of the federal government as was clearly pointed up by the Dorion report.

And though this corruptive invasion has already reached alarming proportions neither the federal nor the provincial governments seem yet to be ready to give the matter the serious consideration it deserves.

True, Prime Minister Pearson made an offer to the recent federal-provincial conference to "beef up" the role of the RCMP as an intelligence agency to combat organized crime but this suggested action is far removed from the drastic measures the present situation demands.

Indeed, the whole pattern of government responsibility toward protecting law-abiding citizens against the force of organized crime seems faulty and open to question. Why, for instance, was Lucien Rivard, Canada's most wanted criminal, suddenly spirited out of this country shortly after his re-arrest before being called to account before a Canadian court for the crimes he committed against the Canadian Crown?

It should not be overlooked that though Rivard was wanted in the United States for alleged involvement in a multi-million dollar drug-smuggling racket, he was also wanted in Canada for a number of offences, among them complicity in attempting to bribe a government official, jail-breaking, assaulting a peace officer, stealing a car, and holding the car's driver at gun point.

Yet despite this substantial list of misdeeds—which could have resulted in a long prison term had he been convicted on them—the government saw fit to give the American claim over him precedence. So far no satisfactory official explanation has been offered the Canadian people as to why and how this decision was so hastily reached.

Many Canadian citizens who believe, with good reason, that Rivard is well able to throw considerable light on organized crime in Canada particularly with regard to its operation in Ottawa and Quebec and its influence over certain ministerial aides, may wonder why the Canadian charges were dropped and the normal course of justice abandoned by the government before it issued his extradition order.

It may be, of course, that Rivard has already given our law enforcement authorities all the information they need and that no more practical purpose would be served in dealing with him through Canadian courts.

It is also possible that the government believes that the cause of justice and the maintenance of law and order in Canada has been better served by handing the situation in the way it has chosen.

But whatever the reason, the public should be kept informed of the government's thinking on what is an affair of vital concern to every citizen whose community may even now be living under the threat of imported gangsterism.

The Blood Royal

NOT LONG AGO Prince Philip came under political fire for venturing to give public voice to his thoughts on Viet Nam. It might be said he took after his uncle, Earl Mountbatten, who has in turn been suspected by Conservatives of being partial to Labor and by the latter as having too much influence at Buckingham Palace.

Both these actions of blueblood inheritance have traits in common, especially in the matter of forthright conviction and wide-ranging alertness of mind. Lord Louis, however, as he prefers to be known, has been the more free to demonstrate that the royal genes may be no less dynamic in operation than those of lesser social status. Although a grandson of Queen Victoria he has not like his nephew been linked closely to the Throne, and thus has been left untied by the protocol that keeps palace opinion to itself.

He is of course of an older generation, one that enabled him to shine as few men of any genre have done in the military crises of his country.

It is a news item from London that is a reminder of the unique role he has played, his appointment subsequent to his retirement this month from active military duty as governor of the Isle of Wight. This is a titular office, a sinecure, but one that serves by contrast to recall afresh the spectacular and unusual variety of his career.

The gods favored Lord Louis at his birth, but the day is long past when royal connection alone sufficed to win assignment to posts of vital importance to national welfare. It was the merit of his restless technical mind and military skills that gave him renown. Any man who in progression can be fighting destroyer captain, Commando leader, Supreme Allied Commander of the Southeast Asia theatre of war, viceroy of India, professional head of the Royal Navy, and latterly chief of the British defence staff, must be of unusual vintage.

Last month in Ottawa Earl Mountbatten told Royal Canadian Legion officials that his retirement after 52 years military service would make him like his listeners, an ex-service man, except that he had been appointed colonel of the Life Guards. This also, as with his governorship of Wight, is a post more ceremonial than active, but one that serves to make him still be heard of the arresting personality in whose veins the royal blood runs in right royal style.

It is not given to a prince consort to play a part comparable with so illustrious a career, but something of the brilliant individual quality of Lord Louis has passed in succession to his nephew. This would be one reason why Prince Philip felt impelled to voice his views on a subject that gives universal concern and which is allied to the realm in which his uncle strode with imposing authority and prestige.

Target for 'Liberation'

Thailand Faces a New Threat

By JOHN STIRLING from Bangkok

THAILAND remains the calm centre of the Southeast Asian typhoon, as it has done for two centuries. At the peak of the 19th-century imperialism, when the British and the French were kicking over lacquered thrones in Burma, Malaya, Laos, Cambodia and Viet Nam, Thailand alone survived. It did so by playing off one nation against another, and by remaining united around its kings.

Now the ancient kingdom faces a new power struggle for Southeast Asia. But it is no longer a simple matter of manoeuvring between Napoleon III and Lord Clarendon. Napoleon III disposed of no guerrillas, nor did Clarendon have jet bombers. Thailand will need its traditional diplomatic class to pass unharmed through the perils which now surround it.

The most imminent threat is the revival of Communist subversion in northeast Thailand. A recent tour of the most "sensitive" provinces revealed common symptoms. Arms have been distributed to villagers in one district, men are being trained in guerrilla tactics, and an anti-government propaganda campaign is in full swing.

The focus of Communist activity is the province of Nakorn Phanom, 300 miles northeast of Bangkok. All the evidence points to the conclusion that the Communist plan to make this province, and in particular the Na Khe district, their firm base. An official in Na Khe explained why this district is so congenial to Communist agents. "It is only 20 miles from the Laotian border. It has dense forests and many caves in the hills where men and weapons can be safely hidden. The small wooden police station in Na Khe town is in an idyllic setting of hillside bushes and bougainvillea vines, but the officer in charge, a young captain, is deeply worried. He says flatly: 'I am now second on the Communist murder list. I was third until the end of April, when they killed my corporal. He knew too much about their movements.'"

Of the 113 villages in the Na Khe district, 75 are under Communist control. The most disaffected village is Bang Luang, where most of the monks have taken to the jungle. This hamlet, lying in the shadows of the Phu Phan Hills, is heavy with fear and suspicion.

Police in Na Khe have found empty weapon chests, indicating that upwards of 2,000 cartridges have been distributed in the area. Laotians have been found, urging peasants to join a Communist-led "struggle to overthrow the corrupt Khmer government" and warning farmers not to accept government money since this is merely a ploy to ruling their taxes.

The provincial authorities have an almost impossible security problem. Agents from Communist-held territory in Laos cross regularly into Nakorn Phanom, and selected villagers are pulled out for training in North Viet Nam and southern China.

Peking has given formal notice that Thailand is the next target for "liberation." Last October Radio Peking announced that "all democratic classes, or political and individual" in Thailand should unite to form a "patriotic democratic united front." The next step was to announce the formation of a "Thailand Independence Movement" to drive out "the United States Imperialists" and to set up a government which would follow a policy of neutrality and peace.

Due to the shortage of politically-conscious Thai proletarians, the Communist bloc is obliged to choose leaders of their puppet "freedom groups" from the traditional Thai ruling class. The titular head of the independence movement is Pridi Phanomyong, 65, scion of a wealthy Chinese merchant family, and a former premier. He has lived in China since 1948. The leader of the United Patriotic Front, who was produced by the Chinese at a recent Afro-Asian conference in Ghana, is Colonel Payon Chalanond, who vanished from Thailand last March.

Peking must realize that these are the hollow men, and that despite more than 15 years of leadership from afar, Pridi and his fellow-exiles have attracted fewer than 1,000 followers on Thai soil. But this is no cause for despair among commissars, for if there is a sudden need for armed insurgency in Thailand, they have two other steel-handed instruments to hand. These are the pro-Communist elements in the Vietnamese and the Chinese communities.

Of the two, the Vietnamese is the more formidable. There are 30,000 or 40,000 Vietnamese, scattered through six of the 15 northeastern provinces. Ninety-five per cent are solidly pro-Communist. Most of them fled to Thailand during the early stages of the Indo-China war.

The pro-Communist Chinese operate mainly in the cities, particularly in Bangkok. They are a small minority of the three million ethnic Chinese in Thailand, most of whom are law-abiding citizens whose main ambition is to merge unobtrusively into Thai society. But the Chinese activists have an influence out of all proportion to their number.

Keenly aware of China's hostile designs, and its subversive activities within the country, Thailand's leaders have decided that their best course is to reassure with the West. The chief underwriter is the United States. There are some 7,000 or 8,000 U.S. servicemen on duty in Thailand, and U.S. fighter-bombers flying from Thai bases have blasted targets in North Viet Nam and Laos. Millions of dollars are being channelled into roads, wells and rural welfare in the northeast. With U.S. help, the Thai army, navy, air force and police are being expanded and re-equipped.

The second underwriter of Thailand security is the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization. But SEATO's member-nations are less than unanimous in their attitude towards the Communist threat. France and Pakistan have cordial relations with Peking and are therefore unlikely to spring to Thailand's defence. The Philippines have no significant military force.

There are some who assume this is just a quarrel among the politicians but it would seem to have deeper roots. This reporter toured the barbed wire called Comas, the largest of the squatter settlements that in one degree of misery and squalor or another add up to perhaps half of Lima's population of 2,000,000.

Comas has many small houses of cedar block and adobe, painted alongside the shacks made of red mud in which most of the squatters live without water or sanitation. On many of the walls were slogans painted in red calling for the nationalization of the oil properties. These barbed wire, in which life is one long painful endurance contest, are a tinderbox that could go up in flames and put an end to Belaunde's hopes.

He has shown great shrewdness in using available resources to get his program of housing and land reform—100,000 units in town and country assigned to individual owners by the year's end—and development of industries, with fishing and fish meal leading all other countries, moving as fast as possible. For the army, the navy and the air force he has initiated a civic action program. Roads are built and trails cleared up by the army while the navy, operating on the Amazon and its remoter tributaries, carries out health and other civic programs. The air force supplies transportation at a minimum cost to overcome the often trackless distances in a country of mountains and jungle largely untouched.

As for the Communist threat, which grew great play in the Lima papers, Belaunde believes the terrorism is mostly banditry, with a thin gloss of ideology and a little help from Havana and Moscow. Resolutely he says that a small part of the answer is military action to suppress banditry; the real answer is social reforms to end the life of centuries of poverty.

Summer Torment

Dear Old Dad

By SHAUN HERRON

MONDAY through Friday we drive the children over to Harvard swimming coach Ben Merritt's swimming pool for their lessons. There we lie about on the lawn among the geese and Bower dogs while the shrill voices of happy children splinter the high piling around the pool, and the geese honk and hiss and the dogs bark and the fragmented country air falls upon acting eardrums like broken glass.

This morning in the mail I got a reply from the Canadian Tourist Bureau in Boston. I wrote the day it opened asking them for—among other things—a list of the motels along the western Ontario Trans-Canada Highway segment. It was not, I think, a difficult request. Three weeks later I received a reply, postmarked Ottawa, without the list of motels. But I did get an expensively printed and well illustrated thing called Adventure Along the Trans-Canada Highway.

The children's voices hoot and cackle from the pool, and the dogs bark about my ears, reminding me of the sound of my children as we drove to Ben's place, and of Calamity Jane as she read and barked alternately from the Trans-Canada adventure book.

"Calamity," I said, "bring that brochure and read it to us on the drive to Ben's."

"This I shall do," she said agreeably after a preliminary peek "and we shall all have lots of fun except dear old Dad."

One buys a station wagon that children may be removed at least to the distance of the tailgate. Instead they sit up with their elbows on the front seat, and breathe grape, vanilla, chocolate and strawberry breath down your tingling neck. And they conspire with mother in villainous glances.

"Picture the old crock," she intones, "in his wing-back chair before a crackling log fire, a book in his hand or a writing board on his knee exhausted from having scaled the stairs to his study. Then hear this," she declaims and "Yeah Dad," the children cry with Quasling relish.

"Here, then, is the Highway to Adventure, opening up the Wonderful World at Your Doorstep."

"In a canyon in his wing back..." the children sing, to Clementine.

"In the limitless spaces of this beautiful province, one-quarter million square acres..." reads Calamity, and "now ask your father how a quarter million square acres can be limitless."

"Get to the good bits," I say "and the rest of you be quiet." She is reading now from "Circle Tours from the Trans-Canada Highway." "North of 53... is a holiday haven..." There is a little satisfaction in her smiling voice "... virgin territory where you'll hear the lonely howl of Canada geese..." and perhaps hear the grunt of the bull moose...

"What's a bull moose grunt sound like, Mama?"

"Ask Great Sitting Bull there," she reads on with faceless pleasure. "Your colorful drive takes you past vast stands of forests, sparkling lakes and The Great Bog..."

"What's a great bog, Mama?"

"Ask Brian Boru there. He is descended from a long line of Irish monarchs of the Bog." On and on she goes, "... the three-day Northern Trappers Festival..." includes the punishing 100-mile dog derby, log throwing, canoe packing, square wrestling...

"Can we enter daddy for the square wrestling?"

"If there's a square around 10-11-38 we won't have to."

"I can't forget the day I saw"

My daddy wrestling with a square..."

A man with a son like that doesn't need enemies; but the boy comes by it honestly.

The reading pushed further north to "the week-long International Trout Festival which includes such colorful events as the 41-mile Gold Rush Canoe Derby..." Indian dancing, a log-rolling contest and the four-packing contest where packers carry up to 700 pounds using only the traditional tumpleski.

Much else is left for the visitors to see..."

"What do you say we enter daddy for the four-packing contest? Then taking out the garbage on Monday morning won't feel like such a backbreaker?"

So we grow older and our wives and children grow merrier. The upsurge coming from the swimming pool is only an echo of the summer's heat.

The first free school was opened in the presence of the governor, Mr. Rev. Bishop Hill, the mayor, Alfred Waddington, superintendent of schools; members of the Board of Education; and a number of ladies and gentlemen.

The schoolroom in which the ceremony took place was "fitted with well-behaved and cleanly-looking boys, who had been arranged in their respective classes by Mr. Joseph, the Head Master."

"The girls," a number of shrewdly dressed, orderly, beaming-looking scholars, "were in a separate department."

aspect of, the riot in the back of the wagon—cool water and fathers are a diversion on a hot summer day.

We drove home the long way round for I had a call to make in Harvard Yard. The ivy is withering on the walls, for the flies that eat the caterpillars—or the caterpillars that eat the flies—have been destroyed by the marvels of chemistry and so the survivors eat the leaves instead.

"Do you like it here, daddy?" the children want to know.

"I love it here." "That is why he is taking us here-by the Great Bog," said Calamity Jane subversively, "where the muskies is encircled with reindeer moss, stunted spruce, tamarack and Labrador tea." There from his wing-back chair he can toss logs, pack flour, wrangle squaws and run behind the dogs. That is, if nobody mistakes him for an elderly trout at the International Trout Festival.

Still, when I am old and grey and full of sleep and nodding by the fire, they will tiptoe respectfully and call me sir.

From Colonist Files

ALL previous benefit entertainments for Victoria were reported broken by the "grand gala garden party" at Government House in aid of Red Cross funds, 25 years ago.

Approximately 8,700 persons attended the garden party—"Never in the history of Government House has such a multitude thronged the grounds. It was literally true, during the peak period of the fete, that one could not see either the stalls or the lawn for people."

One of the guests was Grace Fields, in Victoria on a tour across Canada on behalf of the Navy League, who was given such a welcome by the crowd that she "needed all the assistance of her police escort to make her way to the little square of greenward reserved for the dignitaries of the afternoon."

The first anniversary of the declaration of war by Britain was to be observed with a patriotic meeting at Beacon Hill Park "which promises to be one of the greatest demonstrations of loyalty in the province ever held in this city," 50 years ago.

The program at the park (after a march from City Hall) was to include a prayer, a short address by the mayor, the singing of The Maple Leaf Forever, an address by Sir Richard McBride, the singing of Rule Britannia, an address by Mr. H. C. Brewster, and the anthem.

Under the caption, Reaches Speed of 30 Miles an Hour, the Colonist published a picture of the Curtis Model C11 aircraft, manufactured in Toronto, which was being bought by the British War Office in large numbers.

The appearance beginning to be presented by the Pandora Avenue Methodist Church 75 years ago indicated that "the structure will be of no mean proportions, and the substantial material—roughly dressed stone—of which it is built, gives it a very substantial and attractive look."

Another new church was planned on Flanagan Street by the Methodist Missionary Society of Toronto. This church was to be "two storeys high with square and an iron roof..." The building will be in every way well appointed, and will have the latest improvements in ventilation and lighting.

Two new cars for the Transway Company were about to be brought over from Toronto. "They are first class in every respect, 16 feet in length, and painted yellow."

"For the first time since the colony of Vancouver Island came into existence the meaning of education (was) presented to the people as well as the richest child," 100 years ago.

"No more," The Colonist said next day, "shall the juvenile mind be 'an unwelcome garden that grows to weeds.' Poverty has at length ceased to be an excuse for idle and ignorant childhood. The opening of the Central School yesterday—the inauguration of the temple of free education—has removed the fearful incubus which has lain so heavily and so long on every parent's heart."

The first free school was opened in the presence of the governor, Mr. Rev. Bishop Hill, the mayor, Alfred Waddington, superintendent of schools; members of the Board of Education; and a number of ladies and gentlemen.

The schoolroom in which the ceremony took place was "fitted with well-behaved and cleanly-looking boys, who had been arranged in their respective classes by Mr. Joseph, the Head Master."

Laos Expected to Ask for U.S. Troops

By EDWARD NEILAN, from Hong Kong
Speculation is increasing in this Southeast Asia intelligence centre that U.S. troops will be in Laos, in force, before the end of the year.

The reports, from usually reliable informants, have had no confirmation from official sources.

But there are several indications that the U.S. military buildup will encompass Laos as well as South Viet Nam.

Not the least interesting of these signs is Communist anxiety.

During the last week, the radios of the Pathet Lao, Hanoi and Peking—all monitored here—have dealt intensely in commentaries with the situation in Laos.

The Communists are complaining about "new American plans" involving Laos and the "illegal" elections there.

The broadcasts have been interpreted by experts here as being the type the Communists put out when they're feeling a pinch.

Reasoning behind the possible use of U.S. troops in Laos goes like this:
In order to defeat an enemy you must destroy his base and supply lines. Selective bombing of North Viet Nam has been a step in this direction.

But massive infiltration of regular North Vietnamese units is continuing. Most of this infiltration comes through Laos, over what has come to be known as the "Ho Chi Minh trail."

Strategists have contingency plans to put U.S. ground troops—or possibly those of an Asian ally—in position across a wide cordon stretching from Thailand across the panhandle of Laos into the South Vietnamese highlands and, finally, to the coast near Da Nang where U.S. marines are entrenched. First steps toward implementing the plan have already been taken.

This was the election in Laos recently for a new government assembly under Premier Souvanna Phouma. The Communists have complained that the elections were illegal because they didn't take part. But they had so thoroughly refused to take part that Souvanna made moves of his own.

It now seems likely—and the Communist broadcasts are expressing this fear—that the newly elected Laotian assembly may request outside troops to come into the country to check Communist aggression.

Introduction of large numbers of American—or allied—troops in Laos would again raise the question of possible Communist Chinese intervention.

The Communist broadcasts have also aimed barbs at Thailand for helping U.S. efforts in Laos and South Viet Nam.

There is an increased U.S. logistical effort in Thailand that anticipates a greatly enlarged war.

The speculated contingency plan of ground troops in Laos—which would be accompanied by stepped up bombing of the north—would be called off if the Communists agreed to negotiations. So far there have been no signs that the Communists are willing.

Case Against Beaver Lake Golf Course

Leave the Park Alone!

By A. H. MURPHY

The proposal to construct a golf course on city-owned land adjacent to Beaver Lake finds no sympathy in this corner. That land belongs to all the people of Victoria, not just those who play golf.

Let the golfers go somewhere else. There are nine or 10 golf courses on the Saanich peninsula and three or four more planned. Let them go there and leave the Beaver Lake property alone.

The proposal to establish a nine-hole public golf course on the property would inevitably mean that some of the fine timber in the park area would have to be cut. It would, in the opinion of people who know, mean that the beach area, now in use and that which could be developed, will eventually become less attractive and less used by the general public.

It was said at the recent Saanich-Victoria dinner meeting, at which this proposal was broached, that one of its objectives was to put the area to more intensive use. It seems to me that a golf course would have just the opposite effect. I realize that passageway to the beach area would not be obstructed, but the final result, over the years, would be exclusion of the non-golf-playing public—and believe me, there are a lot of people who don't play.

What's wrong with just letting the area alone? Improve the beach, picnic ground and parking area and just let the rest of it alone.

Must we always develop. Must we push ever onward putting our hand on every piece of natural municipally-owned property in the district.

This is supposed to be a sign of progress?

Or, if we must do something, send in a crew to clean up the underbrush and do whatever is necessary to turn it into a nature park. Or turn it over to the Natural History Society to duplicate its grand job at Francis Park.

This golf course idea is not new. I'm told that it was a hot issue in 1917 and 1918 in the days of Mayor Todd. Saanich and Victoria have squabbled and fought and bickered over the use of the property for 20 years or more. There have been proposals to turn it into a fair ground, a dog racing park and an auto racing track.

Within the past decade there have been schemes to subdivide the whole district and sell it and see nice little one- and a-half-story bungalows planted all over the land.

That plan will be revived, of course, as soon as the city feels the financial pinch. After all, someone will say, there's about 3,000,000 lovely dollars sitting there. Let's get into it. And now we're back to the golf course idea again.

I, for one, hope that when the dust settles the park is still there unchanged.

Offshore Mineral Rights Battle Pearson Won the Day

By IAN STREET

Recently, while being interviewed on the offshore mineral rights dispute by a reporter from a Toronto newspaper, Attorney-General Bonner gave vent to B.C.'s feelings of frustration.

The federal government, he said, isn't making B.C. a guinea pig, as Ottawa claims, by referring the issue to the Supreme Court of Canada for ruling. We are being made the goat.

As expected, a few days later Premier Bennett and Lesage tied off at the federal stand during the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa.

What did surprise and shock many of those present at the closed session was the violence and bitterness of the attack launched by Premier Bennett, and the way Prime Minister Pearson dug in his heels and refused to budge.

Observers said later, outside the conference room, they could not recall any such heated exchange at one of these federal-provincial conferences.

Mr. Bennett on his return last Monday told reporters he was happy to report that Confederation was safe.

CAPITAL REPORT

Asked about the blowup on offshore rights, he made light of it saying that B.C. and other provinces had expressed strong opinions, but regardless of reports from Ottawa there was no anger or malice involved.

Anger and malice, or not, when the smoke cleared, Mr. Pearson had won the day.

Mr. Bennett's eagerness never to lose an opportunity to slap down the "centralists" in Ottawa, we may assume with the benefit of hindsight, proved his undoing.

The conference which began two weeks ago, remember, was originally scheduled to begin May 31, but Premier Bennett was in Japan then, and the prime minister decided to delay rather than go ahead with a substitute delegation from B.C. Far from pleasing the premier, this decision annoyed him considerably.

He called B.C. reporters accompanying the delegation to his hotel room in Tokyo and gave them the only copy he had of the B.C. brief which was to have been presented to the conference.

The strongly-worded attack it contained on Ottawa's position in the offshore rights dispute (B.C. claimed it was a threat to confederation) was for release on the day the conference was to have been held, May 31. It was duly reported with a Tokyo dateline.

The premier chuckled delightedly when this newspaper referred to it as an ICBM attack on Ottawa.

But it gave Mr. Pearson ample warning of B.C.'s position, and as the old saw says, forewarned is forearmed. It was an issue tailored to the new Pearson image of a prime minister with a backbone of steel, able to stand up to the furious onslaughts of greedy provinces. It's difficult to tell what's behind the federal insistence upon a court ruling, because Ottawa says that if it has jurisdiction negotiations will be launched immediately to turn some or all of these rights back to the provinces. Perhaps it wants to negotiate from a position of strength.

It's encouraging no doubt that in similar cases in the U.S. involving offshore mineral rights in California, Texas and Louisiana the courts ruled jurisdiction was federal.

Whatever the reason, it isn't new.

Premier Lesage gave an interesting aside on the issue at Ottawa during the recent conference. He disclosed that during his term as minister of northern affairs, from December, 1953 to mid-1957 in a previous Liberal administration in Ottawa, departmental officials urged him to adopt a similar stand on federal jurisdiction over offshore rights. He refused.

The next attempt was through legislation but this was defeated in the senate.

Ottawa's chances look better now than before, because as one B.C. spokesman noted, those seeking the jurisdiction have in Northern Affairs Minister Laing the perfect foil for their plans.

Build-Up Delights Formosa

Copy, from Hong Kong

The dispatch of more U.S. troops to South Viet Nam has come as a shot in the arm to Nationalist China's hopes.

With the heightened U.S. commitment and escalation of the conflict toward a possible confrontation between the United States and Communist China, the Nationalists on Formosa see new opportunities.

The Nationalist leaders realize that only a direct confrontation between the United States and Red China would give them a chance of recovering the mainland they lost to the Communists more than 15 years ago.

U.S. action in Viet Nam has contributed to improved spirits among the Nationalists who feel they may get another chance soon to clash with the Communists with U.S. backing.

It is no secret that high circles in Taipei are hopeful the U.S. bombing will extend to the China mainland and that Peking's nuclear installations will be among the first targets.

Personal Property Fine Until Communism Dawns

By RICHARD LONGWORTH
From Moscow

Personal property is a fine thing for Communists, says a Soviet philosopher.

But when Russia achieves pure communism, he said, the people will have no private cars, refrigerators, vacuum cleaners or washing machines—because they will not need or want them.

This picture of a future full of communal abundance was painted by L. S. Pavlov, a Leninist scholar writing in the magazine, Problems of Philosophy.

Most of Pavlov's article was a ringing defence of private property, such as privately-owned houses, income, radios and television sets, washing machines—even cars. When he died, it said, the citizen has a "right" to bequeath his property to others.

Such property, Pavlov said, "stimulates the work of laborers... the system of material incentives should be constantly improved."

If the accumulation of goods does not become all-important, he said, it can even help the economy. He praised the farming being done by Soviet workers on private plots of grounds as an important source of food.

Pavlov underlined what abroad is a little-recognized fact of Soviet life—that private ownership is a common thing here, Communists, he said, approve most private ownership, as long as it comes from the sweat of the owners' brow, and not from "exploitation" of other workers.

The majority of Muscovites own radios and television sets, and an increasing number are buying cars. Home ownership in the nation is estimated at 30 per cent or more.

But in the grand by and by,

Pavlov said, Russia will advance from its present "socialism" to "communism," and things will change.

As the nation gets closer to this pure communism, he said, there will be more and more communal services.

"For instance," Pavlov wrote, "the washing machine is important for the housewife and we need more of them. But with the development of communal laundries, the demand for washing machines will drop."

"Also, people will not want private dachas (country homes), because there will be public boarding houses and rest homes," he said.

"Reasonable demands will be satisfied from public consumption funds," he wrote, "and it will not pay to buy such personal property as cars, refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, and so on."

Failure Became Star At 40!

By JAMES BACON

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Paul Ford, the screen's master of the "I was just a kid" line, is a unique star. He's one of the few actors of his stature who hasn't been out of the United States.

He's also one of the few who thinks a hit play on Broadway is the easiest job of all.

"I didn't become an actor until I was past 40," says Sgt. Bilko's most famous patsy. "But when I got into the business, it was because I liked the hours."

THREE HOURS ONLY

"You show up at the theatre at 8 p.m. and you're through by 11. It's not even bad on Wednesdays with the matinees."

"People are always asking me: 'How can you stand saying the same words night after night?'"

"I just tell them that it's easy once you get a play under your belt. It's like stealing the money."

But television is something different.

"Last year when I did The Rafters of Balboa, I never worked so hard in my life. It was 6 a.m. until 8 p.m. every day."

"I was glad to get back into the theatre."

DOING MOVIE

Paul and Maureen O'Sullivan did 18 months on Broadway in Never Too Late and the two are repeating the roles for the movie version—one of the few times an original Broadway cast gets that chance.

Ford has had a life that not even a movie scriptwriter could cook up. He was a failure in everything he tried — except fatherhood — until age 40.

With five children in feed, Ford turned actor for $1 a week in a Long Island summer playhouse.

WIFE DEAPAIRS

"I told my wife not to get discouraged at my low salary — some day I might earn as much as $100 a week acting. She shook her head and looked at me as if I had blown my top."

That decision touched off an amazing theatrical career, in which Ford usually played the rich boss.

Victoria theatre groups have been invited to participate in the Vancouver-based Metro Theatre organization.

The proposal, put forth informally by Metro head Gordon Allan, would see Victoria amateur groups working in McPherson Playhouse on a regular schedule, their standard of sponsored production approved by Metro's artistic director in Vancouver.

Vancouver and Victoria companies would then trade productions between the McPherson and Metro Theatre on Marine Drive.

NOT ENCOURAGING

First reaction in Victoria has not been encouraging for the start of such a system this season.

St. Luke's Players, for example, said their group is trying to build up membership, and will not have an ambitious season.

Bert Farr, well-known Theatre Guild director, said the acting companies in Victoria are "spread very thin."

"There are several groups in Victoria that could easily meet the artistic requirements of Metro," Mr. Allan told me in Vancouver.

SPONSORING BODY

He said Metro is a sponsoring body, not a producing agency. It sponsors productions by the best amateur groups and directors. While it has concentrated on Vancouver, Metro hopes to include the whole province in its operations.

A production of Teahouse of the August Moon, will open the second full season of plays by Vancouver groups at Metro centre.

All productions must come up to a standard set by the artistic director of Metro.

SIX MEMBERSHIP

If Victoria groups joined, that director would travel regularly to Victoria to oversee production standards for productions requesting sponsorship.

Until recently artistic director has been Franklyn Johnson, well-known producer for many years in B.C.

Vancouver groups can join Metro for $10 membership. They would then present play ideas to the society, get sponsorship, and begin working on plays to be shown both in Victoria and Vancouver.

WOULD SEE BEST

Metro would provide expenses and the theatre for Vancouver production. Victoria audiences would see the best Vancouver productions in the McPherson.

Metro theatre in Vancouver has 400 seats, contains good equipment, including a $26,000 lighting plant, valued at $6,000 more than that in Queen Elizabeth Playhouse.

Vancouver officials feel the idea is good, but with Bastion Theatre making use of many actors in its first full season in the McPherson, the Metro idea

Torrid Sex Scenes Too Hot for U.S.

LONDON (UPI) — British film censor Lord Hailsham thinks Americans are a bit squeamish about sex on the movie screen.

The Daily Express quotes him as saying: "The British cinema-going public is far more able to cope with sex on the screen than the Americans are. Our audiences are more sophisticated and sensible. That is why our censorship is perhaps more lenient."

THE EXPRESS REPORTED THAT TWO VARIANTS OF A TORRID LOVE SCENE IN A NEW MOVIE LIFE AT THE TOP HAVE BEEN FILMED NEAR LONDON.

One version of the scene between Laurence Harvey and Honor Blackman shows the couple, with few clothes on, making love on top of the bed sheets.

The other version — for American distribution — has Harvey and Miss Blackman under the sheets.

A STUDIO SPOKESMAN SAID STRONG PRESSURE GROUPS IN AMERICA, LIKE THE CATHOLIC LEAGION OF DECEMENCY, MAKE IT DIFFICULT TO SHOW SCENES OF SEX ON THE SCREEN.

He said these pressure groups "are the really strong influence on censorship in the States."

Indian Girl Aims for Top

985 Admirals Road
Immediate Occupancy
$135
B.C. LAND & INSURANCE AGENCY LTD.

Determination is a lovely Indian girl with a goal—in this case, 15-year-old Shirley Sterling of Joyana, just south of Merritt in British Columbia's interior.

Shirley is the fifth of Albert and Sophie Sterling's seven children—three boys and four girls. She doesn't think she's exceptional. She just has certain abilities. And ambition. And determination.

She goes to school at Kamloops, where she graduated from Grade 12 this year and plans to go on to Grade 13. From there the path is less certain, but not the objective.

PRIMA BALLERINA, NO LESS

What does she want to be? A ballerina, no less. Shirley found her love for dancing with a Kamloops group which won considerable fame for its folk-dance presentations around the province.

Driver Gets Stiff Fine

DUNCAN—Edward Guay of Duncan was fined $85 for driving without due care and attention and for driving without insurance. He was involved in an accident a week ago causing property damage amounting to $4,000. Unable to stop, he struck another car which went out of control crashing into a house on Jubilee Street.

With teacher Betty Sharen she started ballet only last February.

So well did she do that the Department of Indian Affairs decided to sponsor her trip to Victoria this summer for the School of Music's special ballet classes, under Franklin White of the Royal Ballet.

ABILITY SHOWS

Here her ability let her join the senior class, dancing and working and studying with girls and boys who have been dancing in some cases for a dozen years.

There's only one difference. With only a few months of ballet training, she is not yet on point—but she's getting impatient.

The other day she spent part of her lunch hour buying a pair of point shoes. Her teacher is coming down this weekend, and Shirley will ask her how soon she can start work in them.

Nurses Quit At Trail

TRAIL (CP)—The unexpected resignation of 12 nurses has forced the Trail-Tadouac hospital to close 22 of its 50 surgical beds until September.

Acting administrator J. Miller said Monday the resignations are effective at month's end and replacements are not immediately available.

ASK RITHET'S

You are invited to submit questions on insurance and similar matters for inclusion in this column. The editor of each question is kept strictly secret.

Q. I have an insurance policy that contains a Voluntary Medical Payment endorsement. Recently I fell in my own home and broke a rib. I am told that I am not covered. Is this correct?

A. Yes, the Voluntary Medical Payment endorsement is an extension of your legal liability coverage and only applies to the public, never to yourself or anyone insured under the policy.

Meanwhile, "I could just sit and look at them for hours," she says.

STAYS BEHIND

There is one other difference. When the class breaks for lunch and the rest go out for lunch, Shirley will be found studying a little longer in the studio, working out on the bar or going over again what she's just learned.

With most other dancers and musicians here from out of town, Shirley is staying at St. Margaret's School, and she fulfills faithfully one special assignment each evening.

When she left home, her 14-year-old sister Bunny asked Shirley to write every day. Instead, Shirley is keeping a day-to-day diary, complete with sketches.

PAINTS, PLAYS

Shirley is not only a talented dancer. Untrained she has learned to draw and paint well enough to credit any artist's club. Untutored, she has also learned to play the piano.

This young native of British Columbia has been blessed with more than average talent—and no conceit whatever.

"I'm always afraid people will patronize me because of my background. I want to stand on my own feet, and if I fail, fail by myself."

LIKED BY ALL

Certainly in these classes, and at St. Margaret's, Shirley is just one of the girls—liked by all for her friendliness, her sunny disposition, her devotion to her work.

Prima ballerina? With ability and determination, why not?

Trilogy Worth Seeing - Even Out of Sequence

By IAN STREET

It's not often that Victoria gets the opportunity of seeing, in fairly quick succession, three related works by a major European film maker.

We're fortunate that one of these rare occasions has been arranged under the sponsorship of the University of Victoria African students fund.

Asbes and Diamonds, one of the films that make up Andrzej Wajda's Polish trilogy, will be shown at the Fox Cinema today at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. Admission by $1 donation at the door.

OUT OF ORDER

Two weeks ago, the first of the local series screened Kanal. The third film to be shown locally in two weeks time will be A Generation.

Which raises the question of why, when the organizers have gone to all the trouble of bringing in the Wajda trilogy, are the films being shown here out of the order in which they were made and intended to be seen?

There is no continuity of story to this trilogy in conventional meaning of the term. But the films do represent what the problems of national identity and purpose being laboriously sorted out on the screen.

SEQUENCE

The Generation, made in 1954, shows a young working man discovering the party, collective endeavor and a sense of purpose in unity. Kanal, 1957, portrays a little group of resistance fighters cast adrift to make a lonely and desperate journey through the sewers of Warsaw.

Asbes and Diamonds, 1958, deals with orders to kill and the individual confrontation of conscience.

There's a logical progression from hope to disillusionment to indecision and uncertainty.

WORTH SEEING

These are excellent films, well worth seeing while the opportunity presents itself, but why not in the right order? We've seen Kanal, to be followed by Asbes and Diamonds. That's number two and three respectively in the trilogy. Then last of all we'll be able to see the first film, A Generation.

Operetta Choice Made

The Victoria Operetta Society will present Victor Herbert's The Red Mill Nov. 30 to Dec. 1 in the McPherson Playhouse.

The musical will be under the direction of Howard Denke who was musical director for the society's production of The Merry Widow.

Stage director will be Alan Purdy, who has been associated with the Theatre Guild, the Festival Society and other city organizations.

The society will hold auditions at 8 p.m. Aug. 19 and 22 in CIVI studios.

Cumberland Man Promoted

CUMBERLAND—A former resident of this village, Major Harry Moncrief, has been promoted to Lieutenant-colonel.

He was promoted from major July 19 and has been posted to West, West Poles, Germany. He is with the Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry, and will be based on the continent by his wife and family.

Li-Col. Moncrief was born and educated in Cumberland before leaving to join the armed forces.

Danny Kroffat, friend

COWICHAN BAY — Proprietor of Duncan Fisheries Danny Kroffat, who lives with his wife and young child on the Trans-Canada Highway here, had a lucky break Friday when he went fishing at Cowichan Bay. "It was the first time out in two years," Mr. Kroffat said, and after one unsuccessful bite he landed a 30-pound spring salmon, the biggest so far this year at Cowichan Bay. He landed the big fish at about 6:30 a.m. after he was only out 15 minutes. He used herring as bait and he was mooching. Mr. Kroffat said two years ago he caught a 12-pound coho salmon in the Cayuse River. He is participating in the Daily Colonist King Fisherman Contest.

was running almost empty before we turned the fish. For a time it felt so heavy we thought we had hooked bottom, but there was no mistaking the fish when he saw the boat. He took off after our first glimpse at a greenish-brown monster that looked very much like a barracuda.

LAND FISH

Ten minutes later, after a lot of whooping and hollering, we had the heavy three-footer in the boat. The fish was long and slender with a disproportionately large, long-toothed mouth, a slightly dished forehead, with variegated spotting and striping. Its greenish color paled to yellow sides and a white belly. To the amazement of the boat we can attest by a torn finger, that we were well pleased with this cold water pike.

BAIT WOBBLER

A big red and white flash bait wobbler and about 60 feet of line did the trick.

Fifteen minutes later, fishing partner Larry Chateaufort, newly appointed Northwest Territories tourist development officer, hooked into his first Arctic grayling on a No. 5 silver Canadian wiggler, much like a flatfish. He was spin-casting from the anchored boat.

The grayling is the elite and exotic fish of the northwest, both for its fighting qualities and the delicious taste of its firm white flesh.

GRAYLING

Like the salmon of the southern oceans, they have an immense dorsal fin, out of all proportion to their size. On ultra-light tackle, the 2½-pound grayling — better than average size — gave a magnificent surface fight before we netted it.

We were on a swing of the Northwest Territories and this was an unchained fishing trip, courtesy of Merlyn Carter's charter air service out of Hay River.

He flew us in a Norwestern to Wrigley Harbor, about 49 miles northwest of Hay River, across the lake and at the source of the river.

FABULOUS SPOT

Tourist promoters at Hay River are trying to persuade the federal government to build a 10-mile road from Yellowknife to the University of Victoria.

Later that day, Little was to rescue us when our outboard motor broke down on the lake.

In our party was Alex MacDonald who used to operate a fish-buying camp at Pordier Pass. Now he is the editor of Canadian Motorist at Toronto.

He caught the biggest northern pike of the day, fishing off some barges.

Five Students Paddling Down Mighty Fraser

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A thirst for adventure is being quenched in the turbulent waters of the Fraser River by five McGill University medical students.

Nine days ago they set out by canoe from Tete Jaune, near the river's source, high in the Rockies.

Tired, sun-tanned and in the peak of condition the five students beached their two canoes on the river's east bank in Prince George for a weekend.

Easy Going

"It's been easy going so far," said Elliot Scull, 23, who comes from Danton, Maryland. He is the only American in the group.

"Except for the Grand Canyon," quipped John Hoy, 23, of Point Claire, Que.

The other students, all from Montreal, are Mark Longhurst, Duncan Anderson and Michael Stranger.

The medical students plan to ship their canoes down to Hope by truck and journey the river by large, rubber rafts.

Want Road

"The main thing they talk about up there is road. They want to know when they are going to get a road."

Among the rivermen they talked to Don Meuller, 26, who was raised on the river.

"If it hadn't been for him we'd have never made it through the Grand Canyon," Scull said.

Claims Substantiated

Cancer Victims May Get Help Like Diabetics

By STEWING SLAPPEY

FREIBURG, Germany (LAT)—The lives of terminal cancer victims soon may be lengthened up to two years, and other cancer sufferers may receive new treatments which permit them to live indefinitely with the disease.

These claims have been cautiously put forward, and to a large degree substantiated, by East Germany's most eminent physician, Dr. Manfred von Ardenne of Dresden, in a series of lectures here and at Humboldt University, East Berlin.

His findings are so promising that physicians from the U.S. National Cancer Institute in Washington went to East Berlin last month to meet with von Ardenne, talk with his fellow researchers and to hear his most recent lectures.

CO-OPERATION
Dean Burk, a professor at the institute, will take up von Ardenne's work in the United States. A score of West German researchers and physicians here, at Bonn University and other medical facilities, have accepted invitations to co-operate in increasing effectiveness of von Ardenne's methods.

The basic move in his treatment of advanced cancer victims—both human and animal—is to artificially heat the body to 111.2 degrees. Most humans can stand such temperatures without brain damage.

Heat is maintained for 30 to 45 minutes and followed by dosages of cancer medicines. The process is repeated time and again.

AIDS DRUGS
Intense body heat for long periods increases effectiveness of cancer drugs, von Ardenne has proved conclusively. Up to 90 per cent of cancer cells can be killed after the heat has opened them enough for medicines to penetrate.

"Our kill quota of cancer cells," von Ardenne said, "is, in theory, equal to the cell increase rate of tumors of medium malignancy and can extend the lives of patients up to two years."

This treatment, although derived from early research involving high body temperatures, is referred to in Germany as the multi-stage process. Von Ardenne says, "It should be possible to keep a person alive without a complete cure."

BIG DISCOVERY
In 1964, von Ardenne discovered that only 1/10 to 1/50 of drug dosages reach cancer areas. Most drugs cannot be given in larger doses for fear of injuring healthy tissue.

After artificially heating bodies of white mice, it was found that drug effectiveness is much higher. After 30 minutes of 105-degree temperature, medicines are six times as effective as they are in a normal 98-degree body.

After 45 minutes of 111.2 degrees, medicines are 26 times as effective.

In recent months, research has shifted from mice to larger animals, from test tubes to human bodies. Early results are being confirmed.

BIG FACTOR
It is known that every cancer cell does not have to be killed to effect a cure. Something like 100,000 out of every 100,000 do have to be killed, or the disease will spread again.

Von Ardenne's present ability to kill at a 100-to-1 rate is far short of what is needed. His kill rate will be increased, he claims, as he moves further with research.

Von Ardenne makes no claim that his original super temperature, now does he say a cancer cure is assured. He, Pro-

New Integrated Branch Formed

OTTAWA (CP)—Integration of the armed forces moved ahead another notch Friday when RCAF Air Materiel Command became part of Materiel Command.

The new command, one of five in the country, will include the materiel commands of the army and navy also.

Appraising carving—one of few possessions to survive fire—helped woodcarver Kaj Nielsen find life good again thanks to generosity of Victorians who helped provide tools and labor to rebuild his home and workshop. Smaller picture shows Mr. Nielsen running among ruins following disastrous fire last December. (William John photos.)

Helpful Victorians Put Carver on Feet

By JIM BRAHAN

It took less than one hour to reduce a lifetime's work into a heap of charred ruins and smouldering ashes.

Last December, fire ravaged the home and workshop of L. Kaj Nielsen, Victoria, master woodcarver, on the Trans-Canada highway near the start of the Malahat Drive, and caused an estimated $75,000 damage, of which only 12 per cent was covered by insurance.

The 56-year-old craftsman, whose carvings are internationally known, lost everything in the blaze and believed his life's work had been brought to a tragic end.

But, he had not considered the innumerable friends he had made in the city since his arrival in 1950.

DIDN'T REALIZE
"I didn't realize I had so many friends," he said.

"People I scarcely knew would meet me on the street and wish me luck, and sometimes they would grasp my hand and place a $2 bill in it before walking away," he said. "I have received both $5 and $10 bills in this fashion."

Other Victorians donated lumber and other building materials. Power tools were delivered to the trailer in which he lived following the fire.

"On many occasions I did not get the opportunity to thank the people," he said. "They would just leave the tools at the trailer door and leave before I could find out who they were."

WONDERFUL THING
"It was a most wonderful thing to happen to anybody," he said.

"I desperately needed tools to rebuild, because I had lost everything, including, 400 feet of seasoned pine, and about 500 feet of mahogany worth approximately $3 per foot.

"After the fire I hardly had a pencil or even a nail left, and the people of Victoria gave me my start back up again.

In less than eight months he had rebuilt a house and had his workshop back in operation, but many of the tools of his craft will never be replaced, such as the thousands of drawings and templates, as well as some of the tools he had brought with him from his native Denmark.

Questions, Answers

By CHARLES TAYLOR

Q. I have subflooring all through my house, covered with vinyl tile. The problem is nails popping up from the subfloor through the vinyl covering. How can I remove the tile without ruining it? And what kind of nails must I use that will stay down in the floor permanently?

A. Dry ice in a burlap bag can be used to make the tile easy to remove. Move it slowly over a small area at a time, then pry up the tile. The action of the dry ice makes the mastic brittle, and thus easy to break loose from the floor. However, be sure to protect your hands with heavy gloves while working with the dry ice.

You may solve your nail popping problem by using 1 1/4-inch flat-head wood screws. Be sure to pre-drill and countersink screw holes before driving the screws.

I think you will find it much more satisfactory to recover your floor with new tile or some other type of covering, rather than use the old brittle tile, which would be subject to cracking.

Q. We have a small roofed concrete porch which refuses to stay painted. We have tried different kinds of paint, but on the traffic. The sand surface eventually will wear off.

A more permanent solution would be to lay another inch of concrete over the sand treads, and when the concrete has lost its wet appearance but is still soft, brush gently with a wire brush. This will leave slight ridges in the surface.

Q. We have a new home with a black slate flooring in the dining area. Friends tell us that it is going to be most difficult to keep it looking as attractive as it does now. Can you give us some maintenance suggestions?

A. Actually, it should be fairly easy to maintain, although a plain dark floor will show dust and stains more quickly than other surfaces. My advice is to seal the slate with a mastic finish made by a nationally known wax manufacturer. The product is available at janitors' supply houses.

Then use either a regular floor-polishing wax or a self-polishing wax.

Q. The concrete steps in front of our house get slippery when wet. What would you suggest to make them less dangerous?

A. You can apply an abrasive finish by this means which would make for firmer footing. Paint the steps with a good quality masonry paint and while the paint is still wet, sprinkle clean sand over it. It will form an uneven, non-slippery surface when dry.

This may have to be repeated every year or two, depending

VIEWSON SPORT

By Tommy Holmes

Gene Sarazen, the old squire of Westchester, dropped a 15-footer for a birdie on the 18th, and the gallery exploded in applause. The little man in the short pants lifted his spotted white puma hat in acknowledgement and started for the locker room.

At that moment the scoreboard showed Jack Nicklaus six under par after 12 holes and Sarazen whistled. "I wonder if he's playing the same course," Gene said. Sarazen had carded a 78, shooting the back nine in one under par after going out in 43.

"I'm having fun," said Sarazen in the locker room with a tall beaker of beer in front of him. "I'll go a couple of Thunderbird rounds strictly for sentimental reasons. And I mean this."

"Yesterday, Ed Sullivan and I played together in the Pro-Am celebrity round and we both found it hard to believe that 50 years had passed since we started out as caddies at Apawamis. We used to slip into these farms as kids to steal grapes and yesterday we were trying to guess just where the vines used to be."

It was here too when the Westchester Country Club was new and Sarazen was young that Gene scored one of his greatest triumphs. That was his match with the great Walter Hagen for the so-called championship of the world in 1922.

The Girl with the Poodle

Sarazen had won the United States open and the PGA. Hagen had won the British Open. The British professional champion was England's Abe Mitchell and the Haig had to qualify for Sarazen by beating Mitchell.

"This was wonderful," recalled Sarazen. "We played the first 36 holes in Oakmont and I finished two down. Then we came here for the final two rounds."

"In the locker I had here, I found a package and a letter from a girl. 'Go out and beat that swell-headed Hagen,' it read, 'and wear this tie for luck. I'll be the girl in the gallery with the poodle.'"

"The tie had red and white stripes, but I put it on. There was a shower out on the course and the colors began to run and soak through the white sweater I was wearing. I looked like a gored bullfighter."

"I kept looking for the girl with the poodle and couldn't find her. Finally, I caught Hagen laughing at me and the great fight dawned. Of course, he had seen that atrocity of a tie himself."

Sarazen won the match, 3 and 2, and that night was carried to Yonkers Hospital.

"I had a bellyache all day long," said Gene, "and the first doctor called was a Park Avenue scientist who told me I had a nervous reaction to the match. I insisted I never had a nervous reaction to anything and it turned out to be acute appendicitis."

Italians Behind Bushes

Hagen never beat Sarazen in Westchester and Hagen had his own explanation for that. Walter insisted there were Italians hidden behind every bush ready to throw Gene's ball back on the fairway.

"Twelve years later," grinned Sarazen, "that came up again when I found that double-eagle at Augusta. Most people don't remember this, but I was playing with Hagen that day."

This was in the last round of the Masters and Sarazen trailed Craig Wood by three strokes with four holes to play. Gene held a 23-yard shot from the fairway on a par 5 hole to erase Craig's advantage with one swing. They finished in a tie and Sarazen beat Wood the next day.

"That shot," said Sarazen, "sailed over a pond. When we reached the green, I was delighted to find Bobby Jones standing there. 'If you hadn't seen that shot,' I told Jones, 'Hagen would have accused me of having an Italian under water to throw the ball up on the green.'"

Hagen never let up on Sarazen. Once, Gene won the Agua Caliente Open and the prize was 10,000 silver dollars delivered in a wheelbarrow. Once somebody wondered what Gene did with all those cartwheels.

"He still has them," said Hagen. "As a matter of fact, he still has the wheelbarrow."

But Gene would have given a lot to have had Hagen out at the Thunderbird. Walter is in New York Hospital recovering from serious throat surgery. Yesterday, all of the boys at the Thunderbird signed a picture to be delivered to the stricken old-timer with best wishes for a speedy recovery.

It is an exquisite pen drawing of Walter in action in his prime and is captioned, "His Majesty, the Haig."

Saskatchewan Bans Pheasant Shooting

REGINA (CP)—There will be no cock pheasant hunting in Saskatchewan this fall. It was announced Friday by Ernie Paynter, director of the wildlife branch.

Mr. Paynter, who also announced minor changes in bag limits and length of hunting seasons for upland game birds, said "we believe a closed season and a concentrated re-stocking program, both this year and next spring, should bring back our pheasant population more rapidly."

ONE YEAR ONLY? He said if weather conditions during next winter are near normal, consideration would be given to pheasant hunting a year from this fall.

Surveys show the breeding population of sharp-tailed grouse is about the same as last year, but because of the closed season on pheasants, there will be increased hunting pressure on sharp-tails and the bag limit is being reduced. Mr. Paynter said.

The take per day this year will be four, with possession eight and season limit 22. Last year the limit was five per day, 10 possession and 15 for the season.

This year it will be lawful to hunt sharp-tailed grouse in game management areas 1 to 26, and the season will run from Oct. 2 to Nov. 13.

SAME LIMITS Mr. Paynter said the same bag limit as last year would be in effect for Hungarian partridge.

O.C. Cricket

LONDON (Reuters)—Cricket matches in England's counties are being played in a spirit of goodwill and sportsmanship, despite the fact that the country is still recovering from the effects of the recent floods.

The first match of the season was played between Lancashire and Yorkshire at Old Trafford, Manchester, on Saturday. Lancashire won by 10 runs.

The second match was played between Essex and Kent at Canterbury on Sunday. Essex won by 100 runs.

The third match was played between Gloucestershire and Warwickshire at Edgbaston, Birmingham, on Monday. Gloucestershire won by 10 runs.

The fourth match was played between Surrey and Sussex at Brighton on Tuesday. Surrey won by 10 runs.

The fifth match was played between Kent and Essex at Canterbury on Wednesday. Kent won by 10 runs.

The sixth match was played between Lancashire and Yorkshire at Old Trafford, Manchester, on Thursday. Lancashire won by 10 runs.

Up, over and on the way to victory in Highland Games pole vault at Macdonald Park is Gerard Dumas of Victoria, whose winning leap of 14'8" is believed best ever by a Victorian.—(Jim Ryan)

Six Manage to Beat Heat And Finish Marathon Run

On a day when heat made even a short walk tiresome, 11 men went on a 26-mile, 385-yard marathon run yesterday as part of the Highland Games.

Six of them finished the race, and Jim Freeman of Tacoma finished fastest of all, in two hours, 37 minutes, 17 seconds.

BARFOOT BOY To win the Oak Bay Optimist event, Freeman had to overcome a 100-yard head start.

He finished in 1:42:15, while the last runner, Alan Eblen, took 2:49:14.

Eblen, the early leader, ran the final three miles barefoot because his feet swelled to the point where his shoes wouldn't fit, and he finished in 2:49:14.

Others in the race were John Valiant of Victoria (3:25:50), Norm Hedner of Everett, Wash. (3:29:15), Hans Schmidt, Nany, (4:07:12) and Cadet J. M. Ewan, HMCS Venture (4:42:15).

FINISH VAULT Highlight of a heavy day of track and field events was the performance of veteran pole vaulter Gerard Dumas of Victoria. He cleared 14'8", believed to be both his highest vault and the highest ever by a Victorian.

Dumas also won the high jump, clearing 5'3".

Vicki Sargent won four events in the women's open competition.

Ransom Sought For Gem

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—John D. MacArthur, a Palm Beach multimillionaire, confirmed Friday that he agreed to pay $21,000 ransom for the stolen, 100-carat DeLong ruby "to keep it from being cut and resold by loan sharks."

The deal to recover the gem, part of the loot in a burglary of New York's American Museum of Natural History, fell through when Manhattan District Attorney Frank S. Hogan pulled out at the last minute.

APPROACHED

MacArthur, owner of Bankers Life and Casualty Company of Chicago and developer of the Palm Beach Gardens resort in Florida, said he was approached by a man "some time ago."

"He told me that the pawnbrokers were holding the ruby but were getting restless," MacArthur said. "This man said they would release it for $21,000."

CRIMINAL

"If the jewel is as valuable as they say it is, and such a curiosity, it would have been criminal to have saved it up."

"I had bought a jewel for $21,000 and presented it to the museum, it would have been a legitimate tax deduction. So I agreed to do it."

CLEAR WITH FBI

MacArthur said he cleared the deal with the FBI because "I wouldn't want to be in the position of buying a stolen jewel."

The transaction through Justice of the Peace Hugh Duval of Miami.

"I put the money in the First Marine Bank at Riviera Beach," he said. "I do all my business there. It was in Judge Duval's name."

SECRET

"It was to have been released at noon Friday after the ruby was delivered to the bank and examined. This was all supposed to have been secret, no publicity or anything."

In a copyrighted story, the New York Daily News reported that the deal fell through when Hogan decided he wanted "no part" of it. The News said word then was sent to negotiators that the ruby would be thrown into the Gulf Stream.

24 STOLEN

The DeLong ruby was one of 24 jewels stolen last Oct. 29 from the museum. Three Florida beach boys, Jack (Murf) the Star Murphy, 27; Allen Kuhn, 26; and Roger Clark, 25, pleaded guilty to the theft and are serving three-year prison terms.

The Star of India sapphire, most valuable item in the collection, was recovered in a Miami bus station locker in January with Kuhn's help. Total value of the gems stolen has been estimated at $410,000.

Passengers Go Through Crash Drill

The Indian affairs branch is considering a proposal to transfer Grade 12 Indian high school students from Lebel to larger urban centres this fall.

Robert Davey, with the education directorate of the branch, said it would provide greater opportunities for better education for the Indians.

The students have been attending Qu'Appelle Indian residential school, operated by the Roman Catholic Oblate order which Mr. Davey says is inadequate to handle the needs of high school education.

There have been reports from Regina that parents concerned are upset over the proposed move and that it is a breach of the Indian Act.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. has announced a $243,000 contract has been awarded Paul Stober Construction Ltd. to build 20 low-cost housing units at Swift Current.

Work on the project is to begin immediately and is expected to be completed by January, 1964.

A record crowd of more than 7,500 watched the mid-long procession which provided Moose Lake's third annual rodeo.

It is sponsored by the Klondike Club. There were 44 floats and three bands in the parade.

Man Molests Babysitter

Forcefully stripping a 16-year-old girl and sexually molesting her brought a Saanich man into magistrate's court Saturday on a charge of indecent assault.

Garth Duke Dwyer, 28, of 3088 Carol, pleaded guilty. Saanich detective Norman Baker testified the incident occurred around 1 a.m. July 24, when Dwyer was driving the girl home after she had been babysitting at his house.

TORE OFF CLOTHES

Det. Baker said Dwyer stopped the car, tore off all the girl's clothes, then committed an indecent act upon her.

Magistrate William Ostler ordered Dwyer remanded to Thursday for sentence.

Squamish Plant Pickets Banned

VANCOUVER (CP)—Pickets were banned by Supreme Court injunction from the site of a $12,000,000 canonic-chlorine plant at nearby Squamish.

Mr. Justice A. E. Brown granted the order to FMC Chemicals Ltd., when told that picketing could delay construction of the plant, scheduled for completion Nov. 15.

With Christian Education Director Rob Nelson and another counsellor they will spend Monday and Tuesday at Heart of the Hills campsite near Port Angeles, then go to the Pacific Strip Wednesday and the Rain Forest on Hoh River Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Nelson calls it a group lab camp and three hours of each day will be spent on evaluation of group activities through discussion and presentation.

Two station wagons will transport the four boys and eight girls who are making the trip.

Edmonton Phones Tapped 87 Times, Police Say

Alberta

Edmonton city police have tapped telephones 87 times in the last two years, a combined city telephone system and police department report says.

The report says "specially designed monitoring apparatus" was provided at the city police station to monitor conversations.

Telephones were monitored through "a form of search warrant" signed by a magistrate and the superintendent of the telephone system, effective for a maximum 30 days at a time.

The tap is connected to a suspect's telephone and to the police station.

Calgary police have assigned special constables to the pursuit of bicycle thieves.

Two men are on full-time duty following the estimation that $20,000 worth of bicycles have been stolen in six weeks.

Some youthful thieves — they are all youngsters — not only steal bicycles, but exchange parts and paint them so that identification is difficult.

The Alberta government will try to fill a shortage of architects, engineers and town planners by advertising in British newspapers and trade journals.

Frank D. Betts, director of appointments and administration for the government, says that the provincial government has to go abroad to hire personnel. The government now hires personnel from across Canada and the U.S.

There is not an adequate supply of graduates and Alberta industry also is suffering from the shortage, Mr. Betts said.

In the past year 300 persons have benefited by accepting free legal aid in Edmonton.

These persons would have been unable to secure legal assistance otherwise, said S. A. Friedman, assistant deputy attorney-general.

Now, thanks to the work of the Alberta Bar Association, the legal aid system has spread throughout the province, to all major centres.

A heavy volume of tourists has resulted in a shortage of accommodation in Jasper National Park.

"It's tremendous — this year we have more campers and more people than ever," said James Ahlman, president of the Jasper Chamber of Commerce.

Manitoba

A record wheat crop is in prospect for Manitoba and the whole prairie area, according to the annual crop survey conducted by the Winnipeg Free Press.

The lush stands stretch from the Red River to the Rockies, and if there is no serious damage the total yield will be in the neighborhood of 700,000,000 bushels.

The crop is 10 to 14 days late in all three grain-growing provinces.

Rust and frost can be expected to take some toll, authorities agree, but there is hope that the 1963 record volume of 700,000,000 bushels will be equalled or even surpassed.

Speeding drivers are plaguing the Winnipeg police and cluttering the courts.

Normally there are about 30 violations a week. But in the week ending July 24 there were 330.

"If I had twice as many men on traffic patrol we would catch twice as many speeders," said Chief of Police Robert Taft.

Magistrate Isaac Rice said: "Put more men on traffic patrol."

foot specimen, there are three courses open to you—outside of cutting a hole in the ceiling!

You could air-layer it, which means rooting the tip of the plant as a slip but before you cut it off. Cut

It seems a pity to cut up such a fine and healthy plant, though, and I am wondering if you couldn't make a deal with a florist to take it in exchange for a smaller plant.

The pruning also is a little different to that of red raspberries. About two inches is nipped off the tips of the new canes when they reach a height of 30 inches in the case of the purples, 24 inches for the blacks. This tipping causes the canes to push out side shoots on which the fruit is borne. These laterals should in turn be tipped or shortened to eight inches the following spring. After fruiting, each cane is cut down to ground level.

time they reach the middle grades they are so far behind that they have given up.

Those who remain do better than the girls, academically, because by that time the boys are motivated toward college and a career, while the girls on the whole are more concerned with beauty and charm and social popularity and marriage. It is not a question of intelligence, but of emotional dynamics that are too rarely understood and come to grips with in the school system.

Segregated classes for boys and girls, in the early grade might be one way of coping with this problem—and this also, incidentally, might provide a happy solution for a system of racial integration in the schools where sex is the dominant fear of the white group, no matter what other "reasons" are advanced.

Acting's for Women Says Alec Guinness

Guinness was a bit worried this evening. "I saw my rushes in Dr. Zhivago," he explained, "and all the time I'm talking with my head tilted to one side. Now why would I want to do that? David Lean told me it was all right. But I wish I could do the scene again. You don't like to make a fuss or they say you are difficult."

"In the old days, the actor had the right—and spoil the rest of the temperance. Now the directors are temperamental. I've had to spend all day there. David is a very good coplan. In every picture I feel I've been badly cast. I always want to leave after the first two days. Then I calm down. I need reassurance all the time."

Sophia Loren is the love of Sir Alec's writing life. They were somewhat wary of each other when they met for The Fall of the Roman Empire, but after a brief chat, Sophia called Carlo Ponti and said happily, "There'll be no problem with Guinness on the picture. He's a Neapolitan."

"Sophia is so natural," continued Alec. "I've have to be very careful working with Lollobrigida in Heat Paradiso because my heart belongs to Sophia." When they met, Sophia told the actor that she was a child beguiling for absolute bare when his tank suit landed near Naples during the Second World War. And she might even have received a chocolate bar from him. "Rather far-fetched, of course," said the practical Alec, "but it could have happened."

Guinness copied the wig he wears in Divorce from the Time magazine cover of Karpis. "It created so much attention when I first wore it that I became jealous of my wig. To give an extra touch I made it a bit more fluffy. Don't suddenly say, 'Don't make it too fluffy.'"

Norman V. Lourie, executive deputy secretary for Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare, with four of his five sons and daughters, observe operation of automation process — watching computer at work.

Teen-Ager

More Jobs Opening Up With Growing Automation

By KITTE TURNELL

In this Age of Automation, is there going to be a job for every teen-ager? And if you get one, can you take it away from you? Don't worry unduly, two experts tell me. There'll be more jobs, not less, and more leisure to go with them. But you'll have to be qualified to get your job, and far-sighted if you can expect to keep it.

First, listen to Norman Victor Lourie of Harrisburg, Pa. He's Pennsylvania's deputy secretary for public welfare and an expert on the problems of job training and placement for young people. He's also the father of two sons and three daughters, who range from 9 to 27 years, so he knows youth problems well.

"Young people won't have any trouble adjusting to the changes of our technological revolution if they take the training they'll need," he assured me. "This means concentrating on schooling, not using it simply to pass the time."

"True, there are many unemployed teen-agers, but usually this is because they need more training. Scan the newspaper ads and you'll find employment agencies listing jobs they can't fill with well-trained workers.

"In the future, machines will take over much of the simpler work, and the jobs that are left will require longer training."

Should this training be specialized?

"Not too much, and not too soon," Mr. Lourie recommended. "Start with a general, flexible education. Not every teen-ager leaving high school for college can know exactly what he wants to do. But in college, he should begin to explore the avenues which best suit his interests and abilities."

Where will the best job openings be?

"As automation takes over man's work, there'll also be more money to spend on services—for medical and social welfare, for care of youth and of the elderly, and for teaching of all types. There will be big openings in that broad field called the social services."

What about teen-agers who prefer a trade or clerical work?

"They must be better trained at the high school level. However, many of these jobs fall in the service category, too. For example, a machine can't repair a car, and there's a shortage of auto mechanics."

But the automation industry—as they call this world of IBM cards and data processing machines—needs workers, too. According to Joseph T. Searcy, president of Universal Data Processing Corp., of Los Angeles:

"Several hundred thousand jobs will be opened in automation each year for young people, as programmers, computer operators, machine room workers, keypunch operators and administrative personnel."

"What kind of people do we look for? Well, if they are programmers and systems analysts, they must have good reasoning ability. Machine operators must be quick and alert. Some of our equipment runs for $15,000 a month, so it costs too much to leave it idle for long."

"Yes, there are job openings for girls as well as boys. The main thing, whether or not they plan to go to college, is to take their high school work seriously. Then the field is wide open."

In Church Bell Tolls Knell For Two

TRUN, Switzerland (Reuters) — An old church bell being retired from service in the church steeple here fell and killed two persons Friday.

One was a nine-year-old girl who was helping lower it and the other the 70-year-old foundryman who cast its replacement.

'Boulevard Romeos' Prefer U.K. Belles

Girls' Morals, Lives in Danger

LONDON (Reuters) — English girls were warned by their newspapers Friday their lives and morals are in danger from Europe's cafe and boulevard Romeos.

Headlines such as "what every girl should know about these holiday Casanovas" appeared in papers which cited reports of a British girl murdered and another missing, but since said to be safe, in France.

A woman writer in The Sun says:

"To the average Frenchman the English girl has two very favorable assets."

"One is her complexion. The other is her apparent readiness to take not only one sweet from a stranger, but to swipe the whole bag."

"For rightly or wrongly the English rose has gone and got herself one of the most unpleasant reputations in Europe . . ."

"In fact we have become a standing joke as les anglaises. French boys laugh eagerly. 'Made in England,' they say, 'then it's bound to be good quality.'"

Donald Gomery, writing in The Daily Sketch, says everybody laughed from time to time at "the loveliest Frenchman, the bottom-punching Italian and the Spanish gallant who hisses his greeting to the good looking passer-by."

He goes on to ask seriously: "Is it not time that all young British girls travelling abroad were warned—by their parents, their teachers, their sisters—against the lady-killers of the Continent?"

"Too many British girls do not realize that these lady-killers are not always out just out for a mild, harmless flirtation . . ."

"The truth is that British girls are too naive abroad . . ."

"An uglier truth is that Continental wolves think of British girls as easy conquests."

"And to be honest, a few British girls have given the 'wolves' that impression."

"Even the French and Italian governments are getting worried about their 'wolves'."

Anxious to be top pop singer, Diane "Dee" Keen, 19, of Kenya, is seen on beach. She went to Britain 18 months ago, has just signed her first record

The Week in Records

Royalty Views 'Help'

The premiere of the Beatles' new picture, "Help," took place in London this last week. The Queen, Princess Margaret, and many other dignitaries were in attendance. The audience loved it but there have been good and bad comments from the critics.

Alan Price has left the Animals, the reason is not definite. David Rowberry is taking his place at least for the time being.

Herman of Herman's Hermits has finally lost his famous crooked tooth!

His LPs: "Beatles VI," "Herman's Hermits On Tour," "Rolling Stones, Now!," "Summer Days, Summer Nights" by the Beach Boys, and "Just One in a Lifetime" by the Righteous Brothers are all in demand.

What's happening: Watch out for "A Little You" by Freddy and the Dreamers and "Don't Wanna Lose You Baby" by Chad and Jeremy.

Teen Letters

"Dear Kitten Turnell: I am 20½ years old, and my problem concerns the true friends I go around with versus my mother."

"My mother expects a lot of me—such as going around with the 'right' people. Now I feel I have really and truly found some real friends, but my mother, as usual, keeps trying to destroy these friendships."

"This is what she did to my boy friend—now just my friend merely—he and his friends hate my mother for what she started."

"She jumps to conclusions quickly and I mean jumps. But I keep going around with these people and we are all such good friends it doesn't bother them."

"My boy friend and I were in love. I went away to a boarding school and when I got home he said to me we couldn't see each other any more because of my mother."

"What she did, she thought was for my own good, but it wasn't. How could I, all of a sudden, cut off my relationship with him? For some people this may be easy but for me it was terribly hard. I felt like I was expected to go into military commitment until I am 18 years old."

"My father and I got along fine but my mother and I—no! Help—UPSET."

DEAR "UPSET": Give your mother a chance to get better acquainted with your dates and friends. Point out their good qualities to her. Ask what she considers lacking. Talk it all over with your father and ask him to discuss it with her.

Keep enlarging your friendship circle. Include some of the types she admires. Assume that if your mother is that concerned about your choice of friends she'd be even more upset if you had none and moped around home, with the sad, lonely feeling that's contagious and would make you and your parents unhappy.

Confidential to "Shaver-To-Be": The removal of leg and underarm hair has become a part of good grooming for girls.

Statistics reported at a recent Y-Teen Conference produced these facts: About 85 per cent of all females over 14 years shave about twice a week—fewer in the summer. Many begin in junior high.

"Dear Kitten: Please print this hint for teen-travellers, from 'A QUIET TRAVELLER': 'If you take a train, turn it off—turn it low—unless you tell me are assured the sound-effects won't bother anyone within sound-barring range.'"

Roads Nearly Reach Northern Tip

By DON HUNTLEY
CAMPBELL RIVER — Operation Link-up has put Victoria on the doorstep of Cape Scott, with roads connecting centres up the length of Vancouver Island.
 Latest step in the provincial government's road push north was the opening of the Port Hardy to Holberg road recently by a caravan of Port Hardy officials.
 Nimpkish Valley logging roads were connected through to the Gold River area one year ago.
15-Mile Strip
 Shortly afterward, the 15-mile piece of road with a $1,000,000 bridge was completed between Beaver Cove and Port McNeill.
 This connected the communities of Port Hardy, Port Alice, and Coal Harbour with the rest of the island.
 Final link from Port Hardy to Holberg, site of an RCMP radar station, was a dream of early pioneers who settled the grasslands at Cape Scott, on the northern tip of the island.

Old Promises
 Promises 60 years ago of a railroad and road link bought farmers who carved their homesteads from the wilderness, using only the tools they could carry on their backs over the Holberg trail.
 Abandoned homes and farm buildings are all that remain at the end of the 11-mile overgrown trail that leads from the head of Holberg Inlet to Cape Scott.
 Most communities on the northern part of the island are owned by logging companies.
Logging Role
 It was the logging industry that opened this wilderness by punching hundreds of miles of roads into bush.
 Lack of communication between the communities on these roads and the rest of development in B.C. promised their stagnation.

 An archaic boat service urged the construction of a proper road link.
 The present intricate linkup of logging roads is the thin edge of the development wedge.
 It has made possible sudden booming growth of communities up-island.
 But residents know their development is still 50 years behind the rest of the province.
Sudden Access
 The expansion has been brought on by sudden access and communication, and is not the same industrial growth seen through the southern half of the province.
 The transition period in this area has made possible the wide application of new legislation on instant municipalities.
 Port Alice was the first logging community to receive its letters patent under new rules.

Port McNeill and Port Hardy will follow shortly.
 The new town of Gold River, now being carved out of the forest, will never be a "company town". It will receive local government when early residents are established. Gold River's first 40 houses will be occupied in October.
 Rumble Beach now has its first residents. This site is a development near Port Alice.
 Port Hardy recently installed complete water and sewer systems. A large section of new homes is springing up in Port Hardy.
 Port McNeill is one of the fastest growing settlements in the northern part of the island.
 At Tahala on the west coast, a shopping centre, hotel and apartments are now under construction.
 At Kelsey Bay on the east coast a community is being formed with complete water and sewer, modern new homes, and a shopping centre site.
 In all cases, logging companies have initiated the development in the centres they started, giving financial and engineering help.

ties network with the companies that built the roads, and haul timber over them.
 Tourist demand for trips into the area has caused the logging companies to build camp sites at such beautiful places as Muchalat Lake, Vernon Lake, Woss Lake, and Halcro Park at Marble Falls.
Elk Valley
 A forestry access road is now under construction through Elk Valley and down the Heber River to the Gold River mill site.
 But the newly-paved section of highway from Campbell River to Sayward is still the only standard section of highway north of Courtenay.
 The provincial government is widening logging roads north of Port McNeill toward Port Alice and Port Hardy for dual use of the public and logging companies.
 But this can only be considered an interim measure.
 There is still a lot to be done before northern Vancouver Island joins in the growth of the rest of British Columbia.

Does Not Wait

Under ideal conditions, roads and services would have been available before the people arrived.

How Is Your Family Tree?

Yellow Point Man Traces His to 14th Century

By PETER TAYLOR
NANAIMO — Have you ever wondered if your ancestors fought in the Gallic Wars alongside Julius Caesar, or if you are descended from Char Ivan the Terrible of Russia?
 At Yellow Point, south of Nanaimo, lives a member of the historic Barnard family. Arthur Barnard Wilson, born in 1877, land first began to emerge as a military power in Europe, inflicting a humiliating defeat on the French army.
 Three hundred years later the Barnard's again stepped into the limelight when Oliver Cromwell's children married into the family.
 During the First World War the Wilsons proved their family was descended from a warrior family, when both husband and wife joined the army.

 Mr. Wilson was sent home after 18 months at the front with a weak heart (which is still beating 50 years later), while Mrs. Wilson took up her old profession of physiotherapy at the military hospital at Quailcum.
 Today this gracious couple, married in 1902, live on their 120-acre farm, which Mr. Wilson described as "gradually going back to the forest."
 The Barnard ancestral home is in Norfolk, England, built from timbers obtained from a nearby monastery, which was dissolved during the reign of Henry VIII.
 The Wilson's came to Yellow Point 50 years ago, and have resided there ever since.
 They pioneered their land, cutting down many trees on their property; today those trees form their log-built living room.
 Together they worked their farm and only this year the last of their sheep were sold.

Driver Backs Into Trouble

FULFORD — William Furse, 147 Harrison, Victoria, can consider himself lucky after an accident with his car on the steep hill along the Isabella Point road, July 28.
 His worst injury consisted of beetle stings.
 Going up the hill in his 1961 Dodge, he tried to turn on the crest of the hill at Killgore's place — the car stalled and he applied the brakes. They didn't work.
 The car rolled backwards down hill. Mr. Furse tried to steer into some bushes, hit a small mound of earth, the car rolled slowly over — and that was it.
 Mr. Furse got out and walked away — still with remorse and beetle stings.

Labor Man Graduates

Victorian Jack Glover was among 100 graduates of a two-month course of study at the Labor College of Canada in Montreal.
 Mr. Glover, who is recording secretary of the Victoria local of the International Woodworkers of America, lives at 230 Robertson.
 Courses included economics, history, sociology and were open to trade unionists from Africa and Asia. On Mr. Glover's course the foreign students outnumbered Canadians 50 to 50.
 The IWA officer was over 30 competitors for the single B.C. Federation of Labor's single bursary to attend the eight-week session.

It's Nae Tae Hot Mon!

Caledonians Skirl and Swirl Despite Sun

By GEOFFREY MINIH

The man with the plastic bucket tipped up behind the pretty girl in the yellow shirt, took an ice cube from the bucket and touched her on the neck with it.

"Oh, Mr. Brown!" she squealed, whirling round. Meanwhile, to my immediate left, a small boy was begging his father to get him a drink.

I could have done with an ice cube on the neck, or better still, a drink, myself that particular moment. Macdonald Park, where they were holding the Highland Games, was not exactly the coolest place in Victoria Saturday afternoon.

Prostration

It was worse, I suppose, if you were a competitor than if you were a spectator. Although watching those poor guys pulling away in the tug-of-war was enough to bring on heat prostration.

The bagpipers were no help, either, at least for me, who am no digger of Dudelachas. The field was dotted with groups of killed, red-faced men blowing non-stop.

Sassenach Joke

I kept thinking of that old joke about bagpipes: that they are best heard at a distance, and the further away the better. But that, of course, is a Sassenach joke.

Even at the best of times, mass gatherings make me nervous. They give me the urge to yell out.

So Saturday I stuck fairly close to a man named Ryan, whom I discovered photographing a small figure in green silk jacket and brown breeches.

"Hey, Jim, where'd you get the leprechaun?" I enquired. "This is no leprechaun," Mr. Ryan informed me. "He is a competitor in the Under-8 Section of the Irish Jigs and Reels."

Mr. Ryan, with admirable Hibernian bias, then went on to photograph an immense number of other competitors in this section, particularly any small girl who looked as though her first name might be Cathleen.

Finally, caught between the crossfire of two pipe bands, he decided to call it a day. So did I — after all, I'd been there almost an hour, which is enough for any assignment.

"Think we've time to sneak a wee dram before we get back to the office?" I asked him.

Refreshment

"I do not, myself, partake of alcoholic beverages," Mr. Ryan replied. "But I shall be delighted to escort you to the officials' tent and use my good offices to obtain some refreshment on your behalf."

An Irishman's word is as good as his bond and before you could say "Glencoe" or "The MacRae's of the MacRae's," I was in the tent clutching a cooling glass of Old MacGinger ale.

Hospitality

It was cool in the tent, and the tables were liberally provided with sandwiches.

"I've always said you can't beat Scottish hospitality," I remarked to Mr. Ryan. Mr. Ryan nodded. "Yes," he said, "they're a fine people. It's too bad they have this fixation about bagpipes, though."

Kennaird Elected to School Board

North Saanich Voters Support Incorporation

North Saanich residents Saturday voted for municipal incorporation by a slim majority, and elected B.C. Hydro employee John M. Kennaird to the Saanich school board.

The vote was 459 for incorporation and 264 against, or a 63 per cent majority. Sixty per cent was needed.

Mr. Kennaird collected 333 votes to 291 for housewife Ruby-may Parrott.

ELIGIBLE VOTERS

Some 2,100 people were eligible to vote on incorporation and 1,900 for a school trustee.

"I'm very pleased," said Dr. Arthur B. Nash, chairman of a joint council of four property owners associations that asked for the vote.

LAND USE

Deep Cove, North Sidney, Dean Park and Northwest Mt. Newton associations combine to form the council.

"Organization will give us the power to control land use," said Dr. Nash.

Development rulings hitherto have been made by the department of municipal affairs. There has been dissatisfaction with some decisions.

"We couldn't remain unorganized indefinitely, and we want to control our own destiny," said Dr. Nash.

School Trustee Quits

'Two-Bit' Officials Too Much

By BILL STAVDAL

Sooke school trustee Fred Boulter announced Saturday that he's resigning from the board, "fed up to the teeth with having two-bit politicians throw rocks at education."

His resignation is in protest against harassment by civic and provincial politicians, and against public apathy, he said.

DISCUSSION

The resignation will be discussed at a school board meeting Tuesday.

Board chairman Errol Bartanus disagreed with Mr. Boulter.

"The only place he can really dramatize his case is in the board, where he can voice his views," said Mr. Bartanus late Saturday.

SNIPING

Mr. Boulter, 56, a shipwright at HMC Dockyard, has been a trustee for five and a half years. He is vice-chairman of the board and chairman of the finance committee.

He criticized general sniping by municipal councils at school boards over budget matters. It irritates him that school taxes are printed separately in red on municipal tax notices, he said.

NO LIQUOR

"School boards don't ask aside any money for liquor at New Year's, or money for welcoming visiting VIPs," he observed.

"There is no pay for trustees. It actually costs me money to be on that board."

ACCLAMATION

Another thing that disturbs him is that he has won his seat by acclamation for all three terms.

"This is one thing that makes me wonder whether people really want me," he said. "I'd rather go down to defeat at the polls knowing the people had a choice, than win by acclamation."

WILL RUN AGAIN

He said he will run for reelection in December "if the people in the area really want me."

A by-election will not be necessary.

Off Oak Bay

Salvage Tugs Save Sinking Boat

By GORDON DODD

Two Victoria salvage tugs saved a Seattle family's 44-foot luxury cruiser from certain sinking off Oak Bay Marina last night.

Several small craft had earlier gone to the rescue when the boat Dutch Lass struck a submerged rock in the tricky 360-foot stretch of water between Trial Island and the Oak Bay golf course.

HOLE IN HULL

The impact tore a hole estimated at one foot long and six to eight inches wide near the propeller shaft, flooding the engine room almost immediately with four feet of water.

Attorney Don G. Abel Jr., 45, his wife Jane, children Bruce, 14, and Shelly, 12, and a friend Deborah Garrett, 13, remained on board during a drama which lasted over six hours before the cruiser was pumped out and patched up sufficiently to be nursed by salvage tugs to nearby Royal Victoria Yacht Club.

WOULD HAVE SUNK

Skipper Bill Harrison of the tug Nitinat said the cruiser would have gone down "in a few minutes" if the tug and its companion Island Planet had not reached it when they did.

The Seattle party had just left Victoria and was heading for the San Juan Islands on the next stage of its holiday cruise when she struck the rock at about 3:30 p.m.

'I WAS SCARED'

"I had no idea the rock was there," said Mr. Abel. "I was pretty scared," Mrs. Abel added.

Commercial fisherman Bruce Wight, 21, of Oak Bay, was on the scene almost immediately with his 25-foot outboard.

"People aboard were waving towels and shouting they were sinking," Mr. Wight said later. "I threw a line and started to tow them while my friend, Jody Barker, got on the launch and helped them to bail with anything they could find."

He kept the cruiser under tow for an hour doing hardly more than help keep her afloat before two fishing boats, the Holly V and Sea Lion, and later a pilot boat came alongside.

Mr. Wight said bailing was augmented by a small pump aboard the Sea Lion while the small flotilla tried to edge the crippled vessel towards the Marina.

TOWING LOGS

The two salvage tugs which took over operations had been in the vicinity towing logs.

At first, their three pumps appeared to be making little headway and divers were sent down to patch the hole.

It took another four hours before the tugs were in a position to assist the cabin cruiser to the Yacht Club.

The holiday-come-unstuck had a constant gallery from Marina craft and spectators on land.

Labor Urges Provincial Tri-U Gift

A $15,000,000 provincial government gift to the Three Universities Capital Fund Drive has been urged by the B.C. Federation of Labor.

The federation, in a telegram to Premier Bennett, urged that the government fulfill the Tri-U objective of $15,000,000 with a part of the recently announced budgetary surplus of $15,000,000.

The drive has so far collected just over $10,000,000 from public subscriptions.

PERSONAL MENTION

By Dorothy Wrotnowski

Isn't this warm weather just gorgeous? Most Victorians will admit that these last few days have been sizzlers but to Mary Stevenson, recently arrived from Malta, this is very pleasant. I think she said it was 110 the day she left her island home.

Though the weather was pleasant she didn't find the mail strike very helpful. Husband, James, a ship chandler in Malta, had cabled that morning about being "mighty fed up, no mail".

Maybe the news of our mail stoppage didn't reach into the far corners of the world.

Mary first went to Malta in 1948 and has lived there since she was married in 1951. At first she wrote for the Malta News and more lately as women's features editor on the newer, Malta News.

"I'm considered a bit of a freak—women don't work in Malta, especially married women" she says.

Malta has been lifted by the tourist boom in the last few years and Mary tells us that hotels and cottages are mushrooming up practically overnight. Even Hilton has chosen a site even though the hotel has not been built as yet.

The flower business is booming, too. An English firm growing mostly carnations and chrysanthemums for export are expanding rapidly.

This expansion in almost every way has come very quickly and what the end result will be is hard to tell, according to the girl from Malta.

Mary has her two children, Roger who goes to school in Ireland, and Heather with her. They are in Victoria with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Kemble and are also making trips up to the Klembe summer home at Qualicum.

California Cricket

Down at the Empress the other day for the graduation ceremony of the 23 young girls who had finished their training with Western Air Lines in Los Angeles. It was hard to tell who was enjoying themselves most—the girls or their sponsors.

According to Sydney J. Albright, W.A.L. public relations man, the luncheon and whole affair were about the best he had seen done for any class of graduates.

I don't know why his answer to whether he had even been in Victoria surprised me, but it did.

"Oh, yes," he said, "I was here two or three years ago with the all-star California cricket team. The California

Roots in Victoria

Next Friday, August 6, the Empress will be the scene of another important party. Long time Victoria resident, Mrs. Kate Ford, will be celebrating her 80th birthday and there will be about 40-odd old friends with her to reminisce about early Victoria.

The party idea came from Mrs. Ford's son, Capt. Ross Ford, a deep-sea man with the CPA who wrote to Mrs. John Leeming, one of his mother's oldest friends, asking her to arrange a bang-up affair.

Capt. Ford lives in London. Mrs. Leeming, who marked her 80th birthday two years ago, took it from there and now everything is just waiting for the day to arrive.

Mrs. Ford has her roots deep in Victoria. She was born in Victoria, the daughter of Charles E. Redfern who came from England, was one of the men aboard the famous battleship, Tyne-mouth in 1862. Maybe he wasn't old enough but he definitely didn't succumb to any of the charms of the would-be brides aboard ship.

His own wedding to Eliza Arden Robinson took place in October of 1877. Eliza, the daughter of a clergyman had come out from England to visit her uncle, the Rev. Canon Percival Jones of St. John's Church. And they were married by him in St. John's.

Kate Ford's father was a prominent jeweler in Victoria and his place of business often referred to as the "Jewelry of the West" at 43 Government Street.

He was several times Mayor of Victoria and took a leading part in civic affairs during his life time.

The City Hall clock and bell were put in place and kept in order by him for many years. Some can remember him as an old man going up to wind the clock.

Kate Ford herself taught school in Victoria for several years. She was widowed in the First World War.

School Friends

Lesley Morris, daughter of the American consul at Winnipeg, John Morris, will be in Victoria to stay with her former school-chum, Virginia Stoylen. Both girls attended Balmoral Hall when the Stoylens lived in Winnipeg.

Virginia was showing me one of her prized possessions. It seems that last spring her brother, Philip, sent her a gift, Profiles in Courage, written by the late President John F. Kennedy. Virginia was so thrilled with the stories that she sent the book to Robert Kennedy and suggested he might autograph the book for her.

He did promptly and sent it back in a very official looking package. Virginia kept the package, too.

Couple Leave by Plane For Mountain Resort

Guests at the wedding Saturday afternoon of Miss Jacqueline Nichols and William Hudson Stannard gathered after the reception at the Oak Bay Marina to bid bon voyage to the newlyweds who left by chartered plane for a honeymoon at a mountain resort.

Their departure climaxed one of the loveliest weddings of the summer for the daughter of Mrs. Hugh N. S. Nichols, 3735 Cadboro Bay Road, and the son of Mrs. W. S. Stannard of Worcester, Mass.

Oaklands Chapel was decorated with tall standards of white blossoms for the service conducted by H. C. Sheppard.

Long white satin dresses fashioned on empire lines were worn by the two little flower girls, Sheila Roberts and Teresa Taylor. Yellow satin

Given in marriage by her brother, Colin Nichols, the bride was a picture in an elegant gown of imported French satin, appliqued with rose petals and leaves. It was fashioned with a high empire waistline with rose petals and tiny pearls outlining the low-cut neckline. The long court train fell into folds.

A pearl coronet held her wedding veil and she carried a bouquet of pale pink roses.

Organist was Miss Jeanne Irving.

Sleeveless empire bodices highlighted the yellow peau de soie gowns worn by attendants Mrs. B. Gorty and Miss Marvel Tellington.

The A-line skirts featured bold designs of yellow roses on a white silk background with panel trains falling from the high waistlines. They wore coronets of yellow leaves and seed pearls and carried puff balls of white carnations and yellow roses.

Long white satin dresses fashioned on empire lines were worn by the two little flower girls, Sheila Roberts and Teresa Taylor. Yellow satin ribbons touched the waistlines. They had circlets of daisies in their hair and carried puff balls of white and yellow posies.

Gary Wickert was best man and ushers were Len Swatsky and George Burden.

Mrs. Lorne Hudson sang "The Wedding Prayer" before the ceremony.

Hairdressing family candelabra flanked the wedding cake which was decorated with pink rosebuds and surrounded by tulle at the reception in the Oak Bay Beach Hotel. Ken Loudon proposed the toast to the bride.

Leaving on honeymoon, the bride wore a Wedgwood blue ensemble and white orchid corsage.

Here from Beverley Hills For Saturday Wedding

Mrs. Gwynne Wheatley travelled from her Beverley Hills, Calif., home to attend the wedding, Saturday afternoon, of her son, Page Langton Wheatley, and Barbara Joan Nelson.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Nelson of Victoria.

Floral arrangements in mauve and white tones decorated Holy Trinity Church for the ceremony at which Canon F. C. Vaughan-Birch officiated.

Organist was Mrs. F. X. Hodgson, West Vancouver.

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, T. N. Curteis, wore a gown of corded silk tulle, flowing to a full cathedral train at the back. The gown's fitted bodice featured lily point sleeves and a princess neckline, highlighted with appliques of embroidered Alencon lace. Similar accents were at the waistline.

Her hand-rolled veil of silk illusion net mistled from a coronet of seed pearls and crystals. Completing the ensemble was a bouquet of yucca bells and Stephanotis.

Her attendants, maids of honor, Mrs. Hugh McCollough and bridesmaid Miss Corinne Field, were gowned alike in mauve silk organza over glazed gold and green floral prints, with floral headpieces on tone. Gold Dust gladiolus and phloxendendron were in their bouquets.

Best man was Daniel T. Galacher. Ushering guests were Bryan Greenwood, Port Alberni, and David Crooch.

The tiered wedding cake which centred the head table at the reception following in "The Latch," Sidney, was topped with a vase of pink rosebuds. Allan Ballantyne proposed the toast to the bride.

The new Mrs. Wheatley chose a two-piece dress of powder blue for travelling on a honeymoon trip to Sorrento Lodge, Shuswap Lake, B.C. She complemented her outfit with accessories in tone and a corsage of white roses and carnations.

The couple will make their home at 425 Beach Drive.

Winning Contract

By HOWARD SCHENKEN and RICHARD L. FREY

Bridge Quiz:

Do you enjoy the thrill that comes with playing a doubled contract? Although there are just three things you can do when an opponent lowers the boom—pass, redouble or rescue—the accuracy of your choice will exert an enormous influence on your long-run profits or losses. In answering the following six questions you should, in our opinion, pass twice, redouble twice and rescue twice. Let's see if your thinking is the same as ours.

Answers to Bridge Quiz:

a. Redouble. East-West have stepped out of line: East has evidently made a doubtful overall and West has probably doubled on minor-suit tricks which are likely to evaporate. Your powerful spade holding cuts off any retreat by East, so the stage is set for a killing. Note that should the redouble misfire and North be set a trick, it costs only an extra 100, but if North makes the contract, the redouble pays very handsome dividends.

b. Three spades. The more you trust North, the more you should rescue him, since his original take-out double suggests tolerance for other suits besides hearts.

c. Pass. This time you can draw a negative inference from North's failure to double for takeout. This suggests that he lacks interest in the majors, so there is no reason to suppose that the hand will play two tricks better in a major suit than in no trump.

d. Pass—and hope West passes, too. Let's be satisfied to wrap up the doubled game contract; West has probably opened light on a distributional hand, and a redouble may smother him out into a five heart contract which might yield only a limited penalty.

e. Redouble. The redouble is, of course, for rescue. Chances are the hearts are badly stacked, and one heart doubled will be our worst spot. If North bids a spade, we can redouble again to make him choose a minor suit, or rescue in two clubs with the inference plain that we are prepared for two diamonds.

f. Two no trump. Although the one no trump opening is a fair tactical bid opposite a passed partner, there's no denying that North will be disappointed with our spade holding. We should retreat to no trump where we'll take at least six tricks and might even make a lucky game if the opponents fall into a doubling rhythm.

Laughing in Harmony for Kicks!

Long Hair But Great Beat

By TONY DILLON-DAVIS
Skateboarding at midnight? Laughing in harmony? These are some of the weird pastimes of RPM and the Regents, a Victoria rock 'n' roll group which looks as if it's trying to put barbers out of business.

The group is centred around RPM, Raymond Peter May, the 18-year-old wild man of the group, who plays rhythm guitar and sings.

Ray has a few disturbing habits. For instance, during a performance at the Mayfair Shopping Centre, he decided to tour a department store, so, without departing a beat from his song's wild rhythm, he ran around the nearest store.

But this is old hat to the other members of the group.

INTEREST IN MUSIC
The group is made up of Dave Klasinger, 18, playing lead guitar, Steve Pugmley, 18, playing bass guitar, Vince Cownden, 18, organ and vocal, Rick Johnson, 18, on drums, and RPM.

Their manager is Ed Dyke, who met them at the Scope.

"I always had an interest in music. I used to sing with groups myself," he said Thursday.

"I knew I would have a lot of fun with the guys."

BREAK OUT

The group is trying to break out of the Victoria area into the mainland circuit.

They play current hit parade numbers and their own compositions.

Their music goes over with the younger set.

"Their music makes me go ape. No, you know, even apier than ape," said young Ian Cyndy Nichol.

"It just makes you want to get up and dance. You can't keep still."

GREAT BEAT

"They've got a great beat for the new dances," like the frug, the jerk, or the monkey, where a dancer "can really let herself go."

The Regents' ages are an advantage.

"The fellows are at the age when the younger kids really go for them. Reasons they are liked? Well, they have long hair, and they are not quite in the younger age group, but not quite out of it either," said manager Dyke.

"I'm one of the animals of the group," said Mr. May.

"Steve, Dave and myself are the animals and the other two are the humans because they've got short hair."

Why does Mr. May have long hair?

"So my head won't get sunburned. Last summer I had a haircut, and got burned all over the head."

Mr. May peered through his hair.

"We don't like to look scruffy," he said.

What about personal ambitions?

"I would like to meet the Beatles. I think they're fabulous. Everything they've done is original," said Mr. Cownden.

"Do you realize I could have been the first Beatle? I wanted to start the group originally, but . . ."

Mr. Johnson's interruption was silenced by a black look from Mr. Cownden.

The group is building a large following by playing at school dances, the Mayfair Shopping Centre and local discotheques.

"The boys have been doing a good job for me," said A. G. Coning of Mayfair Shopping Centre, who organizes their appearances at the Mayfair mall.

"I am trying to get Bobby Curtola to sing at the mall, and if I can get him, the Regents will back him up."

Mr. Curtola, a young Canadian rock star, will appear at the Memorial Arena Friday.

Mr. Coning is trying to get him at the Mayfair mall the following day.

Queen Mother 65 Aug. 4

By MARGARET SAVILE
LONDON (UPI)—Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother is 65 on Wednesday and still as active as ever.

The popular mother of Queen Elizabeth II has carried out dozens of official engagements this summer, often travelling within Britain by helicopter or airplane as she adores flying about as much as she likes fast autos.

Nazarene Pastor Officiates

This Sunday's outdoor gospel service at 7 p.m. in Beacon Hill Park will be conducted by Rev. William Bahan, minister of the Church of the Nazarene.

With Mr. Bahan, who will preach on Four Things God Wants You to Know, will be the church choir with soloists Charles Parker and Miss June Yarwood.

The services, with a different church in charge each Sunday, are held at the Cameron Bandshell under sponsorship of the local committee, Christian Business Men's Committee International.

In the past year she has also gone abroad to Canada, France, Germany and Jamaica. She plans more travel for the next 12 months and hopes to pay the official visit to Australia that had to be postponed in February last year when she had an emergency appendix operation.

On her birthday the Queen Mother always gets bouquets of flowers from her grandchildren—the children of the Queen and Princess Margaret—who take them along personally if possible to their "Granny Royal" as they call her.

SWEET TOOTH
The Queen Mother's gifts invariably include boxes of chocolates and crystallized fruits as her "sweet tooth" has long been a Royal Family joke.

She is an expert botanist and gardens herself at her country home, the Royal Lodge at Windsor. So she always gets birthday tokens of flowering plants and rare seeds, plus bouquets from all over the world, including rare orchids from the tropics.

MARRIED DUKE

The Queen Mother was born Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon on Aug. 4, 1893, at 25, Paul's Walkway, the English home of the 13th Earl and the Countess of Strathmore. The Queen Mother prefers to call herself a Scot as her father, the Earl, was one and the family is descended from the Royal House of Scotland.

She married the Duke of York, later King George VI, on April 26, 1923. When he died in 1952 the Queen Mother said, "Throughout our married life we have tried, the King and I, to fulfil with all our hearts and all our strength the great task of service that was laid upon us. My only wish now is that I may be allowed to continue the work we sought to do together."

More Saucers Sighted

SPOKANE (AP)—Unidentified flying objects, similar to objects sighted near Oklahoma City, were reported over Spokane Friday night by a Seattle man visiting in Spokane.

Carl Gross of Seattle said about 12 persons saw two of the objects flashing red and blue lights in the sky, one to the northwest and the other to the northeast.

An Oklahoma policeman reported seeing a similar object which appeared to emit red, blue, and white lights.

Air Force radar units in Oklahoma and Texas reportedly tracked the objects on their screens for a time, and said there was no aircraft authorized in the area at the time.

Gross said the group observed the objects near Spokane for over two hours, from 11 p.m. until 1:30 a.m. Saturday.

U.K. Sailor Fined $120

CHEMUNUS—Crew member Mathew Morgan of the British freighter Wanby, now docked at Crofton, was fined $120 in court here Tuesday after he pleaded guilty to impaired driving.

He had been the driver of a car early Tuesday which went out of control on Crofton Road, landing in a ditch.

Facts About FUNERAL SERVICE

That Every Family should know!

Over the years there have been many improvements in Funeral Service. The home was never designed conveniently for funerals. Modern society expects the Funeral Chapel to take charge of arrangements. It is wise to choose McCall's . . . for dignified service, up-to-date facilities and long experience.

'No Bail Posted'—Chief

MONTREAL (CP)—Superintendent J. R. R. Carriere of the RCMP said Friday night "no bond, no arrangement to post bond anywhere" has been made for Lucien Rivard.

Supt. Carriere was commenting on a published report which quoted an anonymous letter as saying that $500,000 will be posted Monday in Houston, Tex. for the narcotics suspect.

RAIL SET

The bail amount was set after Rivard was taken to Texas from Canada to face the charges connected with an alleged ring of narcotics smugglers operating in the U.S.

The report appeared in a front-page copyright story in the Gazette.

The paper said one of its reporters received the information in a letter left for him under a railway station locker by someone who wished to remain unidentified.

'WE'D KNOW'

Supt. Carriere, in referring to the reported bail money, said: "No such arrangement has been made that we know of. And we would know."

Rivard escaped from jail in Montreal March 2 while awaiting the outcome of extradition proceedings, and was recaptured earlier this month. His extradition followed one week later.

Doctors Charged In Gas Death

PARIS (Reuters)—Five hospital officials were charged with manslaughter Friday after an inquiry decided the anaesthetic administered in error to a mother in childbirth was a lethal war gas.

Mrs. Odette Poncet, 32, a doctor's wife, died after a caesarian operation in November, 1963. The child survived.

WRONG COUPLING

An official inquiry reached the conclusion that the mother was given pure nitrous oxide during the operation at the Puteaux Hospital near Paris because couplings on two cylinders in the operating theatre were switched by mistake when the cylinders were replenished.

Harbor Un-Sealed Before Harbor Unsealed

Miss C Delays Big Bang

By AGNES FLETT
KYUQUOT—They finally found Miss Charlie, and the big rock at the mouth of the harbor here is gone.
Fifteen tons of high explosives Friday blasted out a rock at the harbor mouth. Fishermen have cursed the rock for years.

When the rubble is cleared in 10 days the harbor will be open to boats around the clock, instead of just at high tide. There will be 15 feet of water, even at low tide.

Groceries may even cost a little less. Supplies which had to be off-loaded by barge can now be brought in direct to the government wharf.

Kyuquot is the second largest fishing centre on the Island. About 100 boats tie up here.

Drilling the rock to place explosives took six weeks. The job, which will have cost $80,000 when finished, is paid for by the federal government.

The blast would have been touched off a week earlier had it not been for Miss Charlie.

Residents insisted on catching Miss Charlie to keep him safe when the blast went off, but it was a week before he could be rounded up.

Miss Charlie, the town's pet, is a half-tame seal.

Negroes Urged: Dodge Draft

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Mississippi's Selective Service director said Saturday he has asked the Justice Department to look into an appeal circulated by a militant civil rights group calling on Negro mothers to urge their sons to be draft dodgers. (See also Page 3.)

Col. James L. Davis, the head of the draft in Mississippi, said he had forwarded the printed appeal to the U.S. attorney's office here.

"I'm shocked," said Col. Davis, adding that similar incidents had resulted in convictions. He declined to elaborate.

"Negroes should not honor the draft here in Mississippi," said a newsletter printed by the Freedom Democratic Party, a largely Negro group.

Lawrence Guyot, executive secretary of the party, hurried back to Jackson from the Mississippi Gulf Coast Saturday after the newsletter had been published Friday.

He said the party's executive committee neither condoned nor condemned the appeal.

Mr. Guyot said the newsletter was an official organ of the party.

He said he would welcome any investigation. He would not say if the executive committee planned to take formal action on the matter.

Today most of the south coastal woods are closed by government order to industry and the public. Fire watchers intensified their vigil on the parched forests, where humidity has dropped to the vanishing point.

An estimated 5,000 loggers have been put out of work by the forest closure.

AS DEGREES
The temperature in downtown Victoria was probably upward of 90 as the thermometer touched 80 at Gonzales Observatory shortly after 3 p.m. Saturday.

The weather station has always been five to 15 degrees cooler than the downtown area.

The previous record for July 31 was 85.1 degrees, set in 1929.

BROKEN AGAIN
It was the second time in three days that the record was broken. On Thursday the thermometer reached 83.1 degrees, eclipsing the 1947 level of 77.7.

Montreal Postal Deadlock May Be Over on Monday

MONTREAL (CP)—Montreal's postal workers doggedly continued their strike during the weekend amidst indications that the deadlock may end Monday.

Strike headquarters announced Saturday that a general meeting of strikers had been called for 2 p.m. (EDT) Monday. U.N.I.O. officials declined to specify its purpose.

INTERIM REPORT
But there seemed to be a definite feeling around headquarters that an interim report may be forthcoming by Monday from Judge J. C. Anderson.

Judge Anderson was appointed conciliator by the federal government following the walkout that began July 22 and at one time included postal workers in Vancouver, Toronto and other centres in British Columbia and Ontario as well as Quebec.

The fact that a general meeting has been called appeared significant in itself.

CHANGE IN ATTITUDE
As late as Friday William Houle, Montreal president of the Canadian Postal Employees' Association, said following a meeting of strike leaders with Postmaster-General Tremblay that the government had nothing new to offer and that there was no reason to summon a general meeting of the strikers.

Prior to the announcement of Monday's meeting, Mr. Houle said: "We are just waiting for the news. I think it is likely that

Expert Claims Whale Will Die Before Long

SEATTLE (CP)—An expert on aquatic animals said Saturday the world's only captive killer whale is not long for this world.

Ivan Tuxas, producer of the television show Flipper, said 25-foot Namu means more to him as well as companionship, and won't last long in his pen.

Mr. Tuxas said Namu's dorsal fin is drooping, and this is a sign the 4-year-old sea-going mammal is unhappy.

Namu hasn't eaten since Tuesday, but Seattle aquarium owner, Ted Griffin, who bought Namu from two Canadian fishermen, said he isn't worried about it yet.

Mr. Griffin said he is more worried that people don't seem to want to pay $1,500 to see Namu doing slow rolls in his plastic-lined pen.

"I won't know until Monday exactly what I plan to do," he said.

Mr. Griffin said he may move Namu to Tacoma or Everett, or even turn him loose if interest doesn't pick up.

His investment in Namu runs into thousands of dollars. He paid $8,000 just to get the whale from two Namu, B.C., fishermen who trapped the animal in the harbor of the fishing community 250 miles upcoast from Vancouver.

Communist civil war shook the country between 1947 and 1949, the 25-year-old king gave no indication of retreating before his ousted premier, George Papandreu, 77.

Constantine conferred briefly with his premier, George Athanasiadis Novas, Saturday morning. The premier's top minister, Constantine Stephanis, announced that Parliament will reconvene Monday.

"Whether the speaker of the House, Emmanuel Baklatis, likes it or not."

SUSPENDED
Baklatis, a Papandreu follower, ordered Parliament indefinitely suspended Friday night, after an uproarious session, because a quorum was not present due to a boycott by opponents of the government. He said lack of a quorum indicated "disapproval of the government."

Athanasidis Novas gave no hint what might happen Monday if a quorum still was lacking.

CAPITAL BOHA
The Greek capital boiled with rumors of possible next moves. There was talk the King might seek a compromise premier, or call new elections, or even impose martial law with a military government.

One rumor had a secret meeting of Constantine, Athanasidis Novas and top Greek generals and admirals following Friday night's parliamentary tumult.

A senior official of the court says that if people were treated like that in a department store their screams of rage would be heard all the way up to the manager's office.

"However, most of these people are so filled with confusion and guilt that they say nothing," he added.

A report, prepared for the Family and Children's Court Committee by Senior Probation Officer Bruce E. McLean, gives some of the reasons for this unhappy situation.

Since the court's inception in 1960 there have been more than 20 orders made under the Women and Children's Maintenance Act.

If, once the order is made, no further contact with the husband and wife is necessary, the report points out, however, many cases have to be returned to court because of changed circumstances or because the husband avoids responsibility.

As more orders are made each year, more cases come back to the court for enforcement and often such trials take

as much time and effort as the original hearing.

This whole condition is aggravated, of course, by the fact that the Family Court also has the whole juvenile delinquency court problem on its shoulders. With a rising delinquency rate and an expanding population, this, in itself, is a burden for the court as it is now constituted.

The Family and Children's Court Act came into force in July, 1962 and its provisions allow the probation staff to try

More than 125 deserted wives are awaiting hearing of their cases in Family and Children's Court and some of them will not be heard for four months.

Norman V. Lourie, executive deputy secretary for Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare, with four of his five sons and daughters, observe operation of automation process — watching computer at work.

Teen-Ager

More Jobs Opening Up With Growing Automation

By KITTE TURMELL

In this Age of Automation, is there going to be a job for every teen-ager? And if you get one, can you take it away from you? Don't worry unduly, two experts tell me. There'll be more jobs, not less, and more leisure to go with them. But you'll have to be qualified to get your job, and far-sighted if you can expect to keep it.

First, listen to Norman Victor Lourie of Harrisburg, Pa. He's Pennsylvania's deputy secretary for public welfare and an expert on the problems of job training and placement for young people. He's also the father of two sons and three daughters, who range from 9 to 27 years, so he knows youth problems well.

"Young people won't have any trouble adjusting to the changes of our technological revolution if they take the training they'll need," he assured me. "This means concentrating on schooling, not using it simply to pass the time."

"True, there are many unemployed teen-agers, but usually this is because they need more training. Scan the newspaper ads and you'll find employment agencies listing jobs they can't fill with well-trained workers.

"In the future, machines will take over much of the simpler work, and the jobs that are left will require longer training."

Should this training be specialized?

"Not too much, and not too soon," Mr. Lourie recommended. "Start with a general, flexible education. Not every teenager leaving high school for college can know exactly what he wants to do. But in college he should begin to explore the avenues which best suit his interests and abilities."

Where will the best job openings be?

"As automation takes over man's work, there'll also be more money to spend on services—for medical and social welfare, for care of youth and of the elderly, and for teaching of all types. There will be big openings in that broad field called the social services."

What about teen-agers who prefer a trade or clerical work?

"They must be better trained at the high school level. However, many of these jobs fall in the service category, too. For example, a machine can't repair a car, and there's a shortage of auto mechanics."

But the automation industry—as they call this world of IBM cards and data processing machines—needs workers, too. According to Joseph T. Scarry, president of Universal Data Processing Corp., of Los Angeles:

"Several hundred thousand jobs will be opened in automation each year for young people, as programmers, computer operators, machine room workers, keypunch operators and administrative personnel."

"What kind of people do we look for? Well, if they are programmers and systems analysts, they must have good reasoning ability. Machine operators must be quick and alert. Some of our equipment rents for $15,000 a month, so it costs too much to leave it idle for long."

"Yes, there are job openings for girls as well as boys. The main thing, whether or not they plan to go to college, is to take their high school work seriously. Then the field is wide open."

Bell Tolls Knell For Two

TRUEN, Switzerland (Reuters) — An old church bell being retired from service in the church steeple here fell and killed two persons Friday.

One was a nine-year-old girl who was helping lower it and the other the 70-year-old foundryman who cut its replacement.

The old bell, weighing several hundred pounds, was being lowered on a rope held by about 40 children—a customary practice in festive local bell-rings.

Statistics reported at a recent Y-Teen Conference produced these facts: About 85 per cent of all females over 14 years shave about twice a week—often in the summer. Many begin in junior high.

'Boulevard Romeos' Prefer U.K. Belles

Girls' Morals, Lives in Danger

LONDON (Reuters) — English girls were warned by their newspapers Friday their lives and morals are in danger from Europe's cafe and boulevard Romeos.

Headlines such as "what every girl should know about these holiday Casanovas" appeared in papers which cited reports of a British girl murdered and another missing, but since said to be safe, in France.

"To the average Frenchman the English girl has two very favorable assets."

"One is her complexion. The other is her apparent readiness to take not only one sweet from a stranger, but to swipe the whole bag."

"For rightly or wrongly the English rose has gone and got herself one of the most unpleasant reputations in Europe..."

"In fact we have become a standing joke as les anglaises. French boys laugh eagerly. 'Made in England,' they say, 'then it's bound to be good quality.'"

Donald Gomery, writing in The Daily Sketch, says everybody laughed from time to time at "the lovesick Frenchman, the broken-glassing Italian and the Spanish gallant who hies his greeting to the good looking passer-by."

He goes on to ask seriously: "Is it not time that all young British girls travelling abroad were warned—by their parents, their teachers, their elders—against the lady-killers of the Continent?"

"Too many British girls do not realize that these lady-killers are not always out just for a mild, harmless flirtation..."

"The truth is that British girls are too naive abroad..."

"An uglier truth is that Continental wolves think of British girls as easy conquests."

"And to be honest, a few British girls have given the 'wolves' that impression."

"Even the French and Italian governments are getting worried about their 'wolves.'"

Anxious to be top pop singer, Diane "Dee" Keen, 19, of Kenya, is seen on beach. She went to Britain 18 months ago, has just signed her first record.

The Week in Records

Royalty Views 'Help'

The premiere of the Beatles' new picture, "Help," took place in London this last week. The Queen, Princess Margaret, and many other dignitaries were in attendance. The audience loved it but there have been good and bad comments from the critics.

Alan Price has left the Animals, the reason is not definite. David Rowberry is taking his place at least for the time being.

Herman of Herman's Hermits has finally lost his famous crooked tooth!

Hit LP's: "Beatles VI," "Herman's Hermits On Tour," "Rolling Stones, Now!," "Summer Days, Summer Nights" by the Beach Boys, and "Just Once In A Lifetime" by the Righteous Brothers are all in demand.

What's happening: Watch out for "A Little You" by Freddy and the Dreamers and "Don't Wanna Lose You Babe" by Chad and Jeremy.

Teachers Revive Old Hut's Value

Old hut still has practical uses

By EDITH BAGLO

NANAIMO—The old log scout hut in Comox Park here is a sightseeing treat for visitors to Nanaimo. But it is not a relic. It has many modern applications.

This hut had its beginning in September, 1927. The logs were supplied by the late Shelby Saunders.

All work was done by the voluntary labor of local tradesmen and parents of the Cubs and Scouts. In October 1930, the hut was officially opened by Lieutenant Governor Randolph Bruce.

BOY SCOUTS

Since 1958 the Boy Scouts and Cubs have been sponsored by the Lion's Club of Nanaimo. Hundreds of boys have been trained and have held their meetings in this picturesque log hut.

Meetings are held on Monday and Tuesday nights. The building is also used in winter by local and Island Square Dance groups.

Once the Scout Hut had windows. But they were all broken and are now boarded up.

In January, 1964, a renovating job was completed on the entire inside of the building and the exterior painted leaf-green.

PLAY SCHOOL

A children's play school, Jack and Jill, run by registered nurses Mrs. Campbell and Mrs. Sedola has been started in the Scout Hut. The play school was opened in June, and will run throughout the year.

A teacher will be coming in September to teach a Kindergarten class.

Regular summer visitor Mrs. Harley Green of Seattle is vacationing at Tofino. Her husband recently died at Seattle.

Among recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Powell, Tofino Highway, have been Mr. and Mrs. R. Raden and Mr. and Mrs. C. Beardsley from Seattle.

UCLUELET—Alberta Boy Scouts, Cherry Creek troop, visited this community recently when they blazed over the Alberni-Tofino road.

They also visited Kennedy Lake. On arrival at Long Beach, they were met by Ucluelet scoutmaster Joseph Threlkeld, and the boys walked hot dogs and sang songs.

Echo for a Dead School

By HUTU McNEILLAN

CUMBERLAND—It hasn't been standing for 90 years, like the legendary grandfather's clock, and it certainly has seldom been as quiet, but the public school here has echoed to the sound of children's voices for the last time.

The school, built in 1898, has been a Cumberland landmark with a history of being more than just a school.

During the serious flu epidemic in the First World War, it served as a hospital, and also was the base of operations for a regiment of soldiers brought to Cumberland to maintain order during a coal mine strike in early 1900.

At one time it was the public and high school, and later, one room served as a kindergarten.

NANAIMO—William Murdoch, 59, of 170 St. George Street, was fined $225 and given a three-month driving suspension after being found guilty of impaired driving Saturday.

until the new annex was built. Today, all that remains after a week under the hand of a demolition crew, is a shell.

The bell, which hung high in a tower, and which served as home to pigeons, and the date plate, are now reposing in the recently opened museum.

This September public school children will find themselves back at work, in the school formerly used as a high school. Junior high students will begin classes in their new school, built on the Beaufort grounds, and rapidly nearing completion.

Progress is a wonderful thing but many oldtimers in Cumberland will remember with nostalgia their reading, writing and arithmetic days, spent in the big rambling school.

Victim's Father Says: Give Me Hoodlums One at a Time

By RUTH McKELLAR

COURTENAY—The father of young Jimmy Dawson, the boy who was beaten by a gang of youths Friday, said "I would like to be put in an eight-by-eight room with each of those boys, one at a time!"

As James Dawson spoke, police were asking assistance from the public in locating the truck full of youths, responsible for the beating.

Police said the pickup truck is light blue, possibly with out-of-province licence plates with an orange background, and a decal of Woody Woodpecker on the right front fender.

Mr. Dawson, operator of the Marina Grocery at 1535 Cliffe, Courtenay, said:

"This is a terrible thing to happen in a country like this. There are no words to explain how I feel."

He said severe punishment should be handed out for offences of this kind.

"The only thing that will stop this is a return to the lash and much more severe discipline for such incidents."

He added "fines are useless, money is forgotten as soon as it is spent. What we need is a return to corporal punishment."

Jimmy was hitch-hiking home to Courtenay Friday night when the pickup truck pulled over to the side of the road near Buckley Bay.

The lad thought the youths were going to give him a ride.

He ran up to the truck. Five or six young men jumped out and beat him to semi-consciousness, and left him lying in the ditch.

He is in good condition with cracked ribs and a bad bump on the head, at St. Joseph's hospital, Comox.

After the beating, a passing motorist saw Jimmy crawling slowly out of the ditch.

The motorist went to the nearby home of Mrs. J. Bradley, Buckley Bay, and she telephoned RCMP.

The incident occurred on the Island Highway, Buckley Bay is several miles north of the community of Fanny Bay.

Mr. Dawson said the incident was of particular concern to the parents because last year their son suffered a bad bump on the head.

The family came to Courtenay from Ontario a year ago to operate the grocery.

Cowichan Valley Economy Picture Bright Working Level High

By KLAUS MUELLER

DUNCAN—The economy of the Cowichan Valley is a bright picture, with a few dim spots.

Employment remains at a high level, according to National Employment Service manager Bob Robinson.

Number of workers registered unemployed in 405 men and 176 women, compared to 328 men and 219 women in June. For the same period a year ago the totals were 232 men and 154 women.

MAJOR PROJECTS

The construction industry had an unusually busy month due to the large number of major projects such as the new district hospital, private and public school additions, commercial buildings and new house construction underway.

A shortage of carpenters was alleviated by Victoria contractors bringing in their own crews by arrangement with union officials.

PRODUCTION HIGH

The volume of production in the primary industries continued at a high level. Four large district sawmills employed many high school students as holiday replacements, and to relieve a mild shortage of unskilled labor.

Weather conditions for the logging industry were extremely hazardous during the month. In some camps layoffs were necessary due to low humidity, other camps shut down for annual holidays, while many went on early shift.

CREWS VIGILANT

There was no bad outbreak of fires as the B.C. Forest Service and company fire suppression crews were most vigilant in carrying out their duties of fire prevention.

Small outbreaks in the Mount Tzouhalem area were quickly extinguished by the 62 recruited firefighters. At month end humidity had dropped to 32 per cent and is still at a critical point unless precipitation falls.

LEAD MAY

While the quality of hay is excellent this year, the crop is down from 25 to 35 per cent due to lack of rainfall in May and well below normal rainfall in June.

Alfalfa hay is already being imported from the state of Washington at a price of $45 a ton. It is expected that before the end of the year the price will rise another $10 a ton.

DAIRY SHORTAGE

It is expected small quantities of hay will also be brought in from the Cowichan area of B.C. A lack of experienced dairy farm workers continues to exist and district farmers are being hard pressed to maintain their farms.

Retail trade continued to be favourable due to the high level of employment and an increasing number of tourists over a year ago.

Hot weather conditions resulted in a high volume of sales in summer merchandise and completion of wage agreements in primary industries has had the effect of enabling residents to plan and carry out financing of autos, major appliances, home construction and repairs.

Hydro Makes Two Grants

Officials confirmed the chief will be treated with tender loving care.

How Is Your Family Tree?

Yellow Point Man Traces His to 14th Century

By PETER TAYLOR

NANAIMO—Have you ever wondered if your ancestors fought in the Civil War alongside John Brown, or if you have descended from a warrior of the Tiber of Rome?

At Yellow Point, south of Nanaimo, lives a member of the historic Bernard family, Arthur Bernard Wilson, born in 1877.

As a young man of 25 he remembers being taken to a relative of his grandfather's, who had framed on the wall the family tree of the Bernard's going back to the fourteenth century.

It showed that a Bernard had been present at the battle of Crecy Aug. 26, 1346, when England first began to emerge as a military power in Europe, by slaying a humiliating defeat on the French army.

Three hundred years later the Bernard's again appeared on the scene.

The lineage when Oliver Cromwell's children married into the family.

During the First World War the Wilsons proved their family was descended from a warrior family, when both husband and wife joined the army.

MR. WILSON—Mr. Wilson was sent home after 18 months at the front with a weak heart which is still leading 22 years later.

While Mr. Wilson took up his old profession of shipbuilding at the military hospital at Quins.

Today the grandson couple, married in 1932, live on their 12-acre farm, which Mr. Wilson described as "gradually going back to the forest."

The Bernard ancestral home is in Norfolk, England, built by a family of shipbuilders, which was destroyed during the reign of Edward's, again appeared on the scene.

The Wilsons' quest to Yellow Point 30 years ago, and have resided there ever since.

They possessed their land, cutting down many trees on their property; today those trees form their log-bunk living room.

Together they worked their farm and only this year the last of their sheep were sold.

WENT TO COLLEGE—Mrs. Wilson went to the first college set up in England for women in 1849, education she wanted to be a doctor, but "I never knew a study of 11 and had to give up the idea."

Nevertheless she has been a successful physician. She married a successful shipbuilder, who built the famous ship, the Queen Mary.

She makes furniture from white oak, which she grows on her 12-acre farm. She also grows a few other crops.

from England, or from peat cut from other roots. This last method was often used by Canada's Indian tribes.

YAKES AND JUNG—Kron clay from the farm has been put to use by Mrs. Wilson, who, when a friend showed her how to fire pottery, was turning out vases and jugs. Mr. Wilson said he had read that in China a grandfather keeps clay for his grandson to make the perfect copy, but "we didn't person it that far."

In looking back over his life, Mr. Wilson said he was "only an incident in the Bernard family." He never thought of living at Yellow Point the Wilsons have been many changes, but the family property remains unchanged. In fact, it is clearly showing the appearance it had when first settled there by a young man who came to the island in 1835.

We Never Know What Water Means ... Until We Are Out of It

Water is often a problem on these islands of the Inland Passage. In drought years—such as this one—lack of it can be a calamity. Not only the steady weeks of sunshine . . . with only .31 of rain in June, for instance . . . but the almost equally steady westerlies have by August reduced the soil to dust which seems to shrink your skin where it touches. Leaves rattle like empty phrases and when a little water can be spared for a prize plant there is the sucking noise of roots gulping desperately as any baby at a barren breast.

Cool, fresh water. No wonder they make a folk song about it. How I long, right this moment, to have it pour through the hose for vegetables and flowers, to splash clothes and myself in it after so much salty washing, to have it come cold and clear from the tap into glass and pan and kettle. We never know what water means to us until we are without it.

Yet we are the lucky ones, we who have sea and put sand or dust around us. There was sand around me one Mojave Desert August, when my horse lapsed in a sudden sandstorm and threw me into a greenwood bush. Cactus, compass, canteen and hatch went with him; evidently to a "dry" wash, where he was found the next day and where he had found water. My backbones were swept clean to mind and filled with sand for good measure. "This is my white and shaggy" and I was miles from the sandy road I really thought of finding. I think I had lost my confidence in luck for salt-tainted bottle glass.

Luckily the sun and west breeze were not only my dehydrating enemies, but my direction-finder friends. Yet I found it harder than I had ever expected to keep them where they should be. Here and there, as the days hours plucked on, I found my feet avoiding my back or pile-up of sand—anything that meant more effort—and so tending to drift. On the east side were my unbroken dark glasses, my flannel and long-shaved shirt, the scarves through my belt loops and around my neck. The second desert doubled as sand-chamber for nose and mouth, reminding me easily of the times when I "trailed out" long-haired eels at 90° below zero in the same way.

When I had to discard the boots which crippled my swollen feet, I tore the waist scarf in two and wrapped a part around each foot under my fortunately heavy socks. This held in place my last socks, not free from the upper by the heels I always carry.

As the afternoon waned on I found my mind wandering as slowly as my feet. It took more and more effort of will to fight the tremendous yearning to lie down, just for a little while. More and more of the sand became sand, clear, gleaming like sand and I would have to stand still and struggle with myself to keep from changing direction. For some reason I can't explain, none of these mirages ever appeared directly ahead of me to spot me on. Where I had been full of nervous energy at first, now I was lethargic as a fence sitter. Finally all I could think about were water and the chilly, sudden desert dark.

Just before the latter came I struck the road. I had left and at last lay down. I knew my friends would find me. They were aware of the direction I had taken, though they would not start worry-ling about me before night. As it happened, an old prospector and his citizens found me first. He pulled a dirty rag in water from an evaporation bag and gave it to me to lick. I wouldn't have cared if the dirt had been inches thick, as long as water was there, too. But it was hard to swallow and my tongue felt twice its size. Just as I was graduating to a whole mouthful of precious liquid, my friends and their friends arrived to care and on horseback. A plane was next, they told me, and that was the way they found my horse the next day. But I had never really been lost, I told them. Certainly not from God.

You either love the desert or you hate it and that is also true of the mountains and, to a lesser extent perhaps, of the open sea. They appeal only to those who know that material things are not enough and also too much. In the desert you will find flowers and animals existing under almost incredible lack. But the plant roots can spread widely, so as to catch the maximum of moisture, and they have learned to use well the great gift of light. The old-fashioned virtues of patience, endurance, courage—and, for humans, too, which seem to be lacking now: self-discipline and real humor—are necessities here. It is the human which will kill you. Crowding with life, too—and not only in the desert.

A GILEAN DOUGLAS Nature Rambles On Cortes Island

For me the desert has never been just sand and heat and glare, but part of my living and being; a brilliant remembered dream when northern nights are long and words are bare. The smell of sage to sweet on my blouse and yucca candles shed a lovely light on summer's page. Once I saw the Spanish Dagger stab a desert down and have never been quite the same person since.

Trivial as it is in comparison with such aridity, this drought year has brought back recollections not only of the drought but of the summer I first watered with the sea. By the end of June that year the well at Channel Rock was dry. Drinking water had to be carried from a far neighbor's stream and salt water used for bathing, vegetable washing and cooking. Water for laundry came from a small bay where there was still a seepage from the land to sweeten the sea. Sunny day followed sunny day, with hot winds dehydrating plants and people. Especially the rocky suffered, where every morsel of soil had been brought by hand to fill pockets in this great channel rock which seems to slide with heat in a drought year. The almost constant night which nullified what day felt this close to the ocean. All the flowers would surely die if watered, so in desperation I decided to water them from the

Marigold, corydalis, dianthus, rose, celosia, aster, responded well to this drastic treatment; with zinnia and achillea a close second. Armeria lived up to its common name of sea pink and flourished, as did blue-eyed mary, mimulus, vines and myosotis. Alyssum arabis, Iberis, cerastium, Iceland poppy survived in a half-hearted way. Antirrhinum, lavender, painted daisy, lythrum and spirea hung on for a time, but succumbed in August. Chinchinches came through, though tigris did not; nor did linum, platycodon, veronica, heuchera, scabiosa. Aster, pansy, nasturtium, baby's breath, violet and campanula withered almost at once. But out of 35 varieties of flowers a spare salt watering once a week enabled 18 to survive until the fall rains.

It was in the vegetable row that I made my most surprising discoveries. As a result of them both potatoes and tomatoes got a bi-monthly salt watering every year and thrive on it. That asparagus liked salt I knew and I found that broad beans could take a monthly dose. Beets, parsnips, chard and green beans are allergic to this brackish treatment, while watermelon and muskmelon just lie down and die under it. Squash dislikes salt, but cucumber is an astonishing survivor. Lettuce and kale wilt woe. The brassicas and turnips have always come through so far, but look a bit sickly by the middle of August. As the soil in the farm plots is deep and composty, a thorough salt watering twice or even once a month has kept most things growing in arid years. Plus a good mulching afterwards, of course. The orchard is no problem nor any of the small fruits except strawberries. These object to both salt water and drought, so I have had a number of plants at one time or another.

During four summers I worked with salt test plots for both flowers and vegetables. The results were roughly those I have outlined, though sometimes a difference would amaze me. Chard and nasturtium especially showed "infinite variety." There is no doubt that variations would also be found in different climates and with different soils. It is a subject into which I would like to dig more deeply.

The question I am frequently asked is: won't salt water ruin the soil? Too much of it certainly will and that happened to a neighbor of mine who went overboard on starfish and seaweed, our chief fertilizers. But it was 12 years before this calamity came as our heavy winter rains carry off almost anything, including, alas, the good earth in a rocky. At Channel Rock a spring starfish is planted under each potato and seaweed goes on the ground each fall to a depth of several inches. So far all is very well indeed with my soil. We are jolly old salts together.

I wouldn't have missed these drought years or my desert danger for anything. I learned things from them that nothing else could have taught me. More important, I learned about myself and "not to have known oneself is to have known no one." The desert, the mountains and the sea are inspiring teachers and there is one thing they will all tell you: that to live safely is hardly to live at all.

expert, plus various other things, is Manitoba-born, but now he calls Victoria his adopted city.

It just may be, that though during years past he came here only as a visitor, now that he is a resident he will very soon know his city considerably better than many a native.

Because Bill is a cyclist. He hates, so he says in one of the many little vignettes which he types for himself as a hobby, to walk; and a car doesn't get him, as it were, sufficiently down to earth. So he bicycles, early in the morning, mainly, when life is inclined to be less ordinary and perhaps a little more basic.

He likes the waterfront. He watches the passing ships, confers with friendly dogs, is intrigued by the personality of seagulls, and ponders upon the possible reasons for people carrying buckets of seawater up from the Dallas Road beach.

"I would have asked one man what on earth he wanted it for," he says, "but he looked rather as if his wife had been giving him an early morning had time!"

Once, when Bill was very young, he had been, for awhile, a car owner. He had saved up a tremendous sum — $9 — and he became the proud possessor of an ancient trolley which belonged briefly to a disillusioned farmer, who, having sold this modern contraption, discovered too late that he couldn't stop it by saying, "Whoa!" The farm gates suffered, so the farmer put the car up on blocks until Bill Porter came along with his $9, and he went back to his horse.

Much water has flowed beneath the Porter bridge since that day. The only son of a pharmacist, he has memories of the depression years spent in Red Deer, Alberta, where he helped his father in the drug store for long hours of every day in a desperate need to keep the wolf at a distance. All the while he dreamed of being a civil engineer.

He had not much more than attained his majority when the war took him, but when this particular stint was over he came fairly close to realizing his ambition with a job as foreman for the United States engineering department's current project—the Alaska Highway.

This was followed by a period spent in Nainina, where he ran a branch office for a logging equipment firm. But then logging ran into slack times, and he went to Edmonton and got into the oil-drilling business, as a safety superintendent. He worked at this for six years, and here alone, his experiences, he says, would fill a book. In one year he travelled 140,000 miles, mostly by plane, within a single 1,000 mile radius.

"I had some wonderful and adventurous flights, then," he remembers, not without nostalgia.

Nor will he ever forget the terrible runaway oil fires which can erupt, in spite of every precaution, and which require such skill and heroism to quench.

"They're really killers," he said, and added, "The whole thing is a young man's game . . ."

But it was during the phase of his career devoted to the construction of the Alaska Highway that he was witness to a tragedy-drama about which very little is generally known. He calls it, in a vividly told account: "The day Dawson Creek blew up!" It's quite a story . . .

It was February, and about 40 below. Part of the highway job was the stringing of a telephone line between Dawson and Fairbanks, but the only way to come by a post-hole in that temperature was to blast it with dynamite. So there was a lot of dynamite. Six boxcars full. And, as, during wartime, there was always a screaming need for rolling stock everywhere, the boxcars had to be unloaded quickly and released for their next chores.

But then, of course, there had to be storage space until such time as the stuff was required. As it happened, the only available spot for 200 tons of explosives when it arrived was a frame livery barn, right in the middle of the new boom settlement of tents and shacks. Along with the dynamite came a supply of detonators. In addition, just to effect a really tricky situation, the stable contained two tank trucks loaded with 1,500 gallons of aviation gas, for which no other garage had been found.

All this potential grief might still have been safe enough but for the fact that the incredible intellect in charge of storage had heard that dynamite could freeze—so he had better keep it warm. He lit a large fire in an ancient pot-bellied stove in the middle of the barn—and kept it roaring with diesel oil!

"So the inevitable happened", recalls Porter.

The stable caught fire.

The little new settlement housed 5,000 people. In no time at all most of them were there watching the conflagration, until an army jeep skidded up with an officer in it who shouted to the crowd to move out of there, fast, because the building was crammed with dynamite!

Had he been obeyed instantly, perhaps many lives might have been saved. But then one of those clever know-it-alls who turn up everywhere was heard to cry out that it was all right—dynamite would burn, but it wouldn't explode in fire. Which might, commented Porter, be true enough, but the clever party didn't know about the detonators! 100 cases of them.

However, as soon as they heard the word dynamite, a goodly portion of the mob, including Bill and such of his crew who were with him at the moment, scattered in all directions at top speed. Bill had a truck. He and his boys tumbled in and raced out of there "until they ran out of road," at which point, finding themselves on high ground, they stopped, and watched . . .

Long years later, upon seeing his first photograph of the atom bomb explosion and the resulting mushroom cloud now so unhappily familiar, Bill was to realize that he had already seen, at Dawson Creek that grim day, the same dreadful effect in lesser form.

The stable blazed. A nearby fire-truck had been promptly rendered useless through freezing so its team left it there and fled. One of the gas trucks went up, then the second one, and then, right on the heels of that, came the big one. The detonators and the dynamite blew with a vast and mighty roar, a ball of fire appeared in the air above, and then the concussion took over in the form of a terrifying vibration, low-pitched in sound . . .

As though by some giant hand, Bill and his crew were picked up and hurled to the ground. And lucky they were, he said later, that there was snow to cushion their fall, because no one was seriously hurt. But when they staggered to their feet, dazed and shaken, the whole community had disappeared. There was nothing standing at all.

"Flat. A though a great bulldozer had wiped it out," he said.

In buildings a full half mile away there was

PAUL and SPINTLUM WERE FOXY PAIR

In my mail a few weeks ago came a letter from a Williams Lake housewife asking for information about her father's early-day police service. Suddenly, as I read, I realized who she was and as if a door to the past had opened came the sound of gunshots, and the drum roll hoof beats of a posse in hot pursuit.

Other sounds intermingled, the babble of noisy laughter from swinging saloon doors, the creak and harness jingle of old Cariboo stages, and maybe Father Le-Jeune's farewell cry: "Courage, mes enfants!" to four figures standing on the gallows. I was going to say men, but three of them were but 17, the youngest 15.

The lady who wrote happens to be ex-provincial constable Forrest Loring's daughter Dorothy who, for the past 25 years has been Mrs. Alex Brownfield. She and her husband were once-time residents of Victoria, but are now settled at 2144 Maple Street, Williams Lake where Alex is employed by the B.C. department of highways.

Daughters Sandra, Patricia and Virginia, she tells me, are married (three grandchildren) which leaves four boys at home: Jimmy, 15, Forrest, 14, George, 9, and seven-year-old Robin.

It was mainly on account of the boys that Mrs. B. wrote, for, as she put it "they are now old enough to want to know about their grandfather." She couldn't tell them much herself for she was barely a year old when he died in November, 1918.

Of course, on the domestic side, there's more to the Loring story than mere rifle shots and galloping horses. Dorothy's family roots go clear back to the country's beginnings; in fact, to gold rush days when Cornish-born great-great grandfather James C. B. Chenhall came gold seeking to the Fraser. Which was about the time another grandfather, Lorenzo D. Loring, arrived from Virginia with the same idea. Both, in custom of the day, had first tried California.

It was a Chenhall girl, Louisa Jane, who married freighter (and champion horse swapper) Rufus King Evans, and an Evans girl, Ma May, married Lorenzo Loring's son, Provincial Const. Forrest Loring. Another daughter, Isabel, married Provincial Const. George B. Blue and still another, Rose, married Provincial Const. Joseph W. Burr. From which you can figure the Evans girls had the law on their side!

For the benefit of new arrivals, the Cheechako's in our midst, let me explain that this was in a day when the B.C. Provincial Police (older than the Mounties) spelled law and order in 465,000 square miles of western Canada; and had been doing so for 32 years when they were absorbed into the R.C.M. Police in the summer of 1935. Which is fact, I hope, won't be forgotten in the B.C. end of next year's Centennial.

However, back to Mrs. Brownfield, in whose family background were prospectors (Chenhall discovered the Big Hole mine) as well as freighters, packers, trappers and cowpunchers, not to speak of stage drivers (like her step-father Jim McDougall) and occasionally actors — like that cousin three times removed, Raymond Burr, who as Perry Mason gives district attorney Burger his messages every week on TV.

Speaking of TV, the Brownfield boys better turn it off now and listen to a real western. A story that starts slightly common at Skide Valley, about four miles south of Clinton. It was here, in the still heat of an afternoon in early July, 1911, Cariboo freighter Louis Crossin came across the body of a teamster called White, the back of whose head showed every evidence of having been battered with a bloodstained rock that lay nearby.

Prov. Constable Jack McMillan's investigation soon pointed the finger of suspicion to an Indian called Moses Paul, last person to be seen drinking with White (by a Chinese called Chew Wye) and who, when arrested, was in possession of White's watch.

No sooner, however, was Moses Paul safely under lock and key in the wooden lockup at Clinton than his Indian pal, Paul Spintlum, laid in a stock of ammunition and grub then assisted in the stealthy jailbreak that put the pair on horseback heading for Four Mile Lake. There, said to relate, they disposed of the best part of the Crown's evidence — by killing Chew Wye with an axe!

The police, of course, were soon hot on the trail but, as successive generations of Cariboo lawmen will testify, it's no easy matter to run an Indian to earth in that part of the world. Especially if he has friends to supply him with grub and fresh horses. You can couple to this the fact that no foxier pair existed than Paul and Spintlum.

So it was no wonder that, though every lead was followed, the chase continued through the summer, on into fall, and right up to the first snowfall.

When spring rolled round it was the opening day of the Clinton assize, when pre-emptor Charlie Truran rode lickety spit into town to spread the word he had just run into Paul and Spintlum at 51 Creek. Charlie said he pretended not to recognize them, made some excuse that he was looking for straying horses, and as soon as he had slowly ambled out of their sight, dug spurs to his horse until he reached Clinton.

Const. Alec Kindness (not long out from Scotland) was now in charge at Clinton, mainly I suppose because the episode of last year's escape had summarily interrupted Mr. McMillan's police career. Quickly Kindness and Const. Forrest Loring (in Clinton as a witness) enlisted the help of George Carson of Pavilion, along with Jimmie Boyd and Billy Ritchie. Then with Truran acting as guide, the squad galloped out of town in a cloud of dust. At Pollard's ranch, Charlie Pollard joined them which was about the time Charlie Truran's enthusiasm waned, and he dropped out.

On went the posse, until finally they overtook an abandoned pack horse—sure sign they were crowding the Indians. It was when Kindness was in the lead that as the riders turned a bend in a bush trail from a thicket ahead a shot rang out and Kindness was seen to slump forward in his saddle.

As the riders slowed, the constable slid from the saddle to the ground, and by the time Jimmie Boyd reached his side he was dead.

A bullet, it seems, had caught him right through the heart. As the pursuers dismounted to snatch guns from scabbards, two more shots rang out and Forrest Loring felt a sledgehammer blow on his wrist. A bullet had smashed the bone and left his hand dangling.

It was plain to see the outlaws, from their vantage point in the brush, were playing for keeps. Which didn't stop Boyd, however, pumping shot after shot in their direction, while Carson led Loring to the shelter of some trees and Ritchie, risking further flying lead, pulled Kindness' body to safety. Later Ritchie reported how when Jimmie Boyd ran out of ammunition he reversed his gun and using it as a club rushed the outlaw's stronghold. When he leaped over the fallen log that had concealed them, all he saw was some flattened grass and a few empty shell cases. Phantomlike, the outlaws had vanished.

This additional murder was a challenge to the police requiring action immediate and imperative which is why the dean of the force's range-hand man hunters was instructed to take charge of the search. He was Constable (later inspector) W. L. Fernie who brought with him from Kamloops perhaps the best team of Indian trackers in B.C. a squad who, six years before, helped him run train robber Bill Miner to earth.

Fernie soon picked up the outlaw's trail, and he and his eagle-eyed natives followed it closely for 11 consecutive days. So close were they on some occasions they found the Indians' camp fire still burning, and even rice, tea and flour abandoned. On one occasion came the baffling moment when the fugitives' horse tracks merged with scores of others.

"They drive wild horses ahead of them to cover tracks," observed head tracker Alphonse Ignace, adding with grin: "Old Indian trick."

There were other "old Indian tricks" like reversing shoes, riding up midstream, branching off in two directions to meet further on, and sometimes two men on one horse.

Once, single filing it through a narrow brushy trail Fernie suddenly had his doubts and called a halt. The knowing Alphonse took him back a piece and pointed to a lead. Something had smeared it in passing with just a trace of black. The something, said Alphonse, was a cooking pot that hung from a man's saddle!

It was finally in this fashion that the swift pursuit took them across the Bismarck, where occasionally they found stolen horses abandoned, and then came a day when the trail led into the Kelly Lake country and the tracks were lost for good on rocky ground. After that it wasn't long before the aspens turned to gold, a nip in the air gave thought of fall, and finally again came the snow.

It was that December the police tried a new tack for, either through friendship or fear, it was plain to see the outlaws had been consistently helped by other Indians. With the co-operation of the Indian department half a dozen paramount chiefs were called together for a pow wow. After a lot of somberous speech-making on both sides, the chiefs saw the reason for the argument and sent word for the outlaws to appear, and they were handed over to justice. In this, with his intimate knowledge of Indians, I imagine Bill Fernie played a strong part.

Speaking of Fernie, it may be of interest to know that his daughters, Daphne and Mary, are today running their farm on the William Head Road not far from Weir's beach in the Metcabe district.

It was after two trials (Vernon and New Westminster) that Spintum was found guilty of murder, and Moses Paul adjudged an accessory after the fact. The former was hanged at Kamloops and the latter died of tuberculosis soon after he commenced his life sentence.

To work Mrs. Broomfield's uncle Joe Burr into the picture, we have to drop back 35 years before the Paul and Spintum affair, to the day when he got an interesting provincial police assignment. It was the occasion when, as I read in an old police record: "Constables Shepherd, Burr and Crotty escorted the McLean brothers to New Westminster."

Harry Shepherd, by the way, ultimately became Chief of Police of Victoria, succeeded in turn by another ex-provincial policeman, J. M. Langley. A reminder that the present chief, John F. Gregory, got his initial training in the same school!

The McLean gang consisted of Archie, Charlie and Allan, three half-breed youths ranging in age from 15 to 25 who, along with 17-year-old Alec Hare, shot, then stabbed, Prov. Const. John Usher while resisting arrest on a horse-stealing charge just outside Kamloops in December, 1871. After Usher's brutal murder the lawless quartet rode on a wild harey through the Nicola, holding up scattered ranch houses for food, arms and ammunition. Near Stump Lake one of them killed an inoffensive old shepherd called Kelly and further on they tossed a coin to see if they would kill rancher Tom Trapp.

"Heads you die!" was their saring comment as the coin glittered in the air.

Lucky for Trapp it came down tails, which permitted him not only to live to a ripe old age but later go down to New Westminster and establish Trapp Motors. Probably the first McLaughlin dealer on the mainland (which to the Broomfield boys means Saskatchewan) he reserved optimism in the car's merits for he rode a horse to and from the garage!

Of course a police posse was soon on the track of the McLeans and brought them to bay in a deserted cabin near the head of Nicola Lake. There was some sporadic shooting on both sides and finally when the gang ran out of food and water, out they came with their hands in the air.

Came next the escort from Kamloops to New Westminster which, in the days before the CPR was built, followed the style of leg-ironing the prisoner's under the horses' bellies. In this quaint fashion, seven horsemen rode single file to the coast, picking their way in the latter stages through the snowbound canyons of the Fraser to Yale. There they had hoped to continue by canoe, but found the river frozen clear up to Harrison. So they did the next best thing; piled the handcuffed prisoners in a straw-laden wagon at Chilliwack and two days later were opposite New Westminster where, so severe was the winter, horses and wagon crossed the Fraser on the ice.

Interesting to note that Mr. Justice P. A. Irving who passed the death sentence on the McLeans, had a son called Bruce who joined the B.C. Police, and in turn his son joined the force. Today he's Inspector Wyman "Kelly" Irving of the RCMP.

Finally on a frosty morning in late January, 1881, the three McLeans and Alex Hare were the principal figures in B.C.'s only quadruple hanging.

All of which goes to show how much pioneer history was prompted by Mrs. Broomfield's letter—stories that may give her boys some idea of the Cariboo that was, and the parts that were played by grandpa Loring and great uncle Joe Burr.

VICTORIA WAS TO BE BOOT and SHOE CAPITAL

There is always something new in history, and it was with astonishment that I recently learned that where James Dunsmuir built his Hatley Park mansion in 1908 there was once a tannery, which gave considerable impetus to local business and caused Victoria's leading citizens to believe that this capital one day would be an industrial power.

The tannery was there to supply a thriving boot and shoe business in Victoria. There were those optimists here who actually believed that Victoria would become the Kendall of Canada, Kendall being the city in England's Lake District where boots and shoes are made for export to all the world.

John Switzer, whose grandchildren now live in Victoria, seems to have been the power behind the tannery, the boot and shoe business.

He reached Victoria, presumably from San Francisco, in March of 1871, for there was, in The Colonist, this note: "A new industry—Mr. John Switzer, a gentleman who arrived on the last steamer, intends establishing a boot and shoe factory in this city. Part of the machinery necessary for this enterprise arrived by the Pacific. The remainder will be here with the next steamer and as soon as a proper building can be constructed or leased the new industry will be inaugurated. There is no fear but that the enterprise will pay well."

Victoria was certainly not very large in 1871, and one today wonders how on earth the citizens of that day thought a boot and shoe industry could fare well here. Yet Victoria was manufacturing to a surprising degree—even pianos and cigars. These industries flourished for some years and then, it seemed, Victoria could not compete against Vancouver and Seattle and later against the east, more's the pity, you might say.

Anyway, by April of 1871, less than two weeks after his arrival here, John Switzer had the business going: "Shoe factory—Mr. Switzer, who lately arrived in this colony, has leased two flats of Oliver's brick building over Dalby, Wilson & Company's store, and in the course of a month or six weeks the new industry will be in full blast."

(One wonders if today there could possibly be a pair of Switzer boots or shoes in existence in Victoria; they would be a collector's item and museum piece. So, folks, you who have lived in Victoria for years and years and years, search your attics and basements and cubbyholes and see if you can come up with Switzer's shoes—they might be worth a fortune, if not in cash, at least in curiosity and sentiment.)

For two years, from the spring of 1871 until early 1873, Switzer's was evidently the place in Victoria to get your boots and shoes. In January of 1873 there was a gathering to pay tribute to Mr. Switzer and his wife, as we read in The Colonist:

"Testimonial of esteem—on New Year's Day the employees of Mr. Switzer's Belmont Tanning and Shoe Factory presented Mrs. Switzer with a handsome tea service, accompanying the gift with an address expressing the high appreciation in which they hold Mr. Switzer as an employer and a man.

"The presentation took place at the factory in the presence of all the employees and the compliment (which we are sure was well deserved) was acknowledged by Mr. and Mrs. Switzer, who were entirely taken by surprise. After the presentation the recipients were entertained at a collation provided by the workmen."

From this, one must gather that Mr. Switzer had moved to Belmont, the area still called by that name. From what one can learn from old records the tannery was on the spot where the castle of Hatley Park is today, one of the most beautiful areas in the whole of Greater Victoria.

The Switzer boot and shoe business was doing so well that many of Victoria's most influential business men eyed it and so Mr. Switzer, deciding to enlarge, took in some of his fellow citizens as partners, hoping to expand and flood the Pacific Northwest with his boots and shoes.

In March of 1873, there was, according to The Colonist, "a large and influential meeting—at the offices of Messrs. Drake & Jackson—to consider the advisability of forming a joint stock company to be known as the Belmont Tanning and Boot and Shoe Manufacturing Company. Mr. Gracini occupied the chair, and Mr. Stahlshmidt one of the promoters of the scheme, made a lengthy and clear exposition of the object sought to be obtained—the fostering of an important branch of local industry."

Mr. Switzer seems to have been a good talker, a booster, a believer in his own products, and ambitious for success: "He showed that the plant and building at Belmont, which it was proposed to hand over to the company were capable of producing $200,000 worth of leather, boots and shoes in a year; that a market had been found for $30,000 worth of boots and shoes during the past year; that the trade was steadily expanding; that with an increased population, consequent upon the railway, and other public works, the concern would be run to its utmost capacity."

So persuasive was Mr. Switzer, so sure of his plant's future and that of the country that "when—the stock books were opened—the sum of $23,300 was subscribed on the spot," and forthwith the new company decided "to acquire another 546 acres of land at Belmont," and this most assuredly was all the property upon which the Canadian Joint Services College stands today.

The Colonist was right back of such an enterprise, and gave the meeting's punchline: "The unanimous expression of the meeting was that the enterprise must not be allowed to languish, and that the investment must be made to prove profitable and beneficial to the community."

This was no fly-by-night promotion, with fly-by-night promoters. The list of those backing the boot and shoe business here was impressive indeed. It reads like a who's who of the Victoria of the time: Roderrick Finlayson, J. A. Grahame, A. J. Langley, E. Gracini, J. H. Turner, Robert Burnaby, A. Keast, Charles Stroum, G. Fromie, W. P. Sayward, Joseph Spratt, R. H. Austin, C. W. R. Thomson, J. Lowe, Joseph W. Trutch, Joseph Boscowitz, Uriah Nelson, Simeon Duck, W. C. Ward, T. L. Stahlshmidt, T. W. Bulky, Thomas Alsop, M. W. T. Drake, J. B. Matthews, Peter McQuade, T. H. Long, W. Baines, B. W. Pearce, R. E. Jackson, D. W. Higgins.

Finlayson, a mayor of Victoria, was son-in-law of John Work, and J. A. Grahame was a Work son-in-law, too; Charles Stroum had prosperous warehouses in Bastion Square; W. P. Sayward was British Columbia's first lumber king; Joseph W. Trutch was British Columbia's first lieutenant-governor; Joe Boscowitz was a shipping merchant and Joe Spratt had the Albion Iron Works from which a great shipyard grew; M. W. T. Drake, also had been a mayor of Victoria, and was to become a judge of the supreme court; Peter McQuade had a booming ship chandlery shop; B. W. Pearce had the Victoria and Esquimalt Waterworks; D. W. Higgins, editor of The Colonist and Mr. Speaker of the Legislature; W. C. Ward, importer, commission merchant, banker, financier of great repute; Robert Burnaby and Simeon Duck, real estate tycoons and members of the Legislature. They were all for boots and shoes.

Could ever there have been more important people to back up Mr. Switzer's tannery and boot and shoe business?

And so all went well, and the

The LAND of MYSTERY

In 1965 a dream I had nurtured for some years finally came true. I had long wanted to visit the Chinese mainland to see for myself how good or bad was the job done by communism for that huge nation of more than 600,000,000 people.

In 1961 I tried very hard to go, but they were not yet ready for tourists, and, although I went specially to London to visit their Embassy there, I could get no definite decision from them, and finally gave it up.

This year, with an executive and council meeting of the International Hotel Association to attend in Japan at the end of May, I decided to try again. I wanted badly to go to Moscow and enter China via the Trans-Siberian Railway, and I wrote Peking to that effect. Soon I had a prepaid cable from them, advising that my visa awaited me in Moscow. However, I found I could not afford the extra 10 days this would take, so I cabled them that my time schedule would force me to enter at Hong Kong. Back in a few days came another prepaid cable, telling me the visa would be waiting in Hong Kong.

On May 1 I left that city by Hong Kong train, which took me in two hours to the border town of Shanhai. Here I left what we call the Free World, walked across the border and found myself in the Land of Mystery. I was taken in charge by two bright, friendly young men, who attended to all the border-crossing formalities—passport examining, form filling, baggage transferring, money changing.

Finally all was finished, and they urged me to rest while they served me tea and talked to me of China and Canada, particularly the universities, and the Canadian teachers they had had while getting their training. I found then, and all through China, that I only needed to mention our Canadian Dr. Norman Bethune to see their faces light up with reverence. Everyone knows of him, and a memorial has been built near the spot where he served and died.

Soon I was ushered to the dining room for my first meal in Red China, and an excellent one it was. When this was finished my young helpers settled me on the train for Canton, and my journey into the mainland had begun.

Here I must say that from the time I crossed the border everything was cleaner than on the Hong Kong side. The train was spotless with beige cotton slipcovers on all seats, and old-fashioned lace antimacassars to rest our weary heads against. It is also quite true that in all of China flies and mosquitoes have been eliminated. City streets are washed each morning and kept free of litter.

The cost of the 30-day tour I had chosen had been sent to Peking before I left Canada, and I would not have needed another cent with me, as from the moment I crossed the border it covered everything—trains, planes, car and driver, English speaking guide, room with bath in the best hotels, meals, evening entertainment, and of course all museums, galleries, etc. Hong Kong money could be changed at the border, and changed back if unused, so, in case I could find anything to buy, I converted $300 into Chinese yuen (worth 12 U.S. cents each). I was very wise, for, although I brought back quite a bit of this $300, I also came out loaded with parcels of beautiful Chinese handicrafts—dress ornaments, brooches, needlepoint, exquisite woven pictures and water colors, by both old and contemporary artists, embroidered pictures, ivories, jade, crystal, and of course their wonderful stamps.

My first city was Canton, which I reached on the train in mid-afternoon. It was the great May Day weekend, and it seemed as if at least two million of Canton's three million people were on the streets during the time I was there. My hotel room looked out on the Pearl River, which is absolutely fascinating, with its never-ending stream of river traffic of all shapes and sizes, most of it propelled by hand. Each morning I rose early and went out to walk along the embankment, enjoying the friendly people who were so quick to return a smiling "Good morning."

I visited the huge Canton Trade Fair where many Europeans were placing orders. Here also I inspected my first commune, typical of those all through the country. Here lived 37,000 people, made up of 9,000 families. A handsome intelligent young man of 38 (married, with three children) was the director, elected to this position for 10 years.

After many cups of tea, and a story of the commune's history, we went on a tour of their schools, hospital, theatre, fish hatchery, brick kiln, cement quarry, rice mill, their chickens, ducks, geese, pigs and 400 cows, their 233 electric pumps for irrigation with 15 pumping stations. They produce vegetables, sugar cane, peanuts, rice, fruits, milk and meat, for their own consumption and for sale to the cities.

In their minds there are only two periods in history—"before or after liberation." For instance I was told that before liberation (1949) peasants never had more than two scanty meals a day. With liberation "land reform" came into being, when each peasant family was given a piece of land supposedly large enough to make their living on. This lasted only six months, by which time they had decided that collective work would be much more satisfactory than individual. Now each peasant family has a very small piece of land where they can raise produce for themselves, and all (both men and women) work for a wage in the communes. I must admit all these I saw had the satisfied look of well-fed and busy people.

From Canton I travelled by small unpressurized plane to Hangchow, a beautiful city of 600,000 people. There is a good deal of industry here, but my time was spent with the more attractive products, particularly their silks and embroideries, for which they are deservedly famous. I visited a silk factory, and again was surprised at the efficiency of it—330 machines, operated by 1,700 workers, working around the clock in three eight-hour shifts, and turning out beautiful work.

I also inspected a sanatorium situated on a hillside where the view alone should cure one's ills. Here also I visited the tea-growing brigade of a people's commune. Since picking was in progress this was most interesting, and I particularly enjoyed being asked to visit a private home. Hangchow is situated in the midst of heavenly lakes, and altogether is a spot one can't forget.

Next I went by train to Shanghai, that teeming industrial centre of 10,000,000 people. Here I saw a huge trade and industry exposition which opened my eyes to what they are making. Even though I am not interested in machinery I was amazed at the display of their accomplishments in the fields of traffic, agriculture and medicine, while their more beautiful handicrafts had me speechless. I visited a "workers' village" on the outskirts of the city, where 60,000 people, composed of 1,100 families, are housed in apartment buildings. These are the families of factory workers who are taken back and forth to their work by trucks. The village is complete with schools, nurseries, hospital, shops, market, park, cinema and "culture hall."

As well as visiting these amenities I was invited into the private homes, I could have seen many of them but I limited my time to two, and very much enjoyed visiting with the owners of these two homes—each consisting of two clean, airy rooms, with kitchen and bathroom shared with another family. This was heaven compared with what they had had in the old days, and one housewife, who did not go out to work, even complained that she had put on too much weight since "liberation" (when she was a bride) because life was so much better for them.

On Sunday morning in Shanghai my attractive young guide took me to a children's palace, of which there are several in various parts of the city. They are rather like a school with various

'You Catch 'Em and I'll Cook 'Em'

"He riseth up early in the morning and disturbeth the whole household. Mighty are his preparations. He goeth forth full of hope. When the day is far spent he returneth, empty handed and the truth is not in him." Of course this is not true of all fishermen . . . sometimes excuses are not necessary for the catch has been good.

Fish or no fish, the fisherman is invariably behind the eight ball . . . some wives would sooner have the excuses than the fish, for they are not enamored of cooking them. On more than one occasion I have heard a friend remark: "I don't mind Jack going fishing as long as he doesn't bring home any fish." So there you are! You can't win, Bub.

Well I'm not one of those finicky wives . . . you catch 'em and I'll cook 'em. I'll even clean the creature if necessary. For real unadulterated eating pleasure there is nothing to equal a meal of fresh-caught fish . . . preferably small trout or grilse.

Suppose luck has been good and we have a mess of small trout, beheaded and gutted (tails left on) we wipe them clean inside and out with paper towels. Salt the insides and roll in seasoned flour. Fry whole in a heavy skillet with plenty of butter or bacon drippings. Turn once, browning well on both sides. Lift carefully onto a hot platter and garnish with lemon wedges. I suppose you know that if the backbone is broken before frying they will not curl in the pan. With fresh home-made bread and butter plus a tossed green salad this is a meal fit for a king.

Perhaps you are going to cook your fish on an outdoor barbecue or grill. Or maybe you'll be cooking them over a camp fire beside a stream.

If you are cooking fish on a grill, brush with salad oil (after wiping dry) and be sure the grill is well greased to prevent sticking. Fish is done when it leaves its translucent membranes and flakes easily with a fork. Small whole fish grilled over medium coals take 1 to 4 minutes on each side. Some people like to brush the fish before cooking with any sauce mixed with the salad oil but a purist would consider this gilding the lily.

If you don't belong to this school you may like a sauce to go with your fish. This recipe makes a tasty, sweet-sour sauce that will go with any variety of fish.

FISHERMAN'S SAUCE . . . 1 green onion chopped (tops and all), 1 Tbsp. lemon juice, 1 tsp. sugar, dash Tabasco, ¼ cup water and 1 tin tomato sauce. Combine all the ingredients and heat. Serve with any fish.

Small fish are best pan fried or grilled but if it's a big one, perhaps a gorgeous Snake salmon, that your man brings home, then I'd suggest stuffing and baking it and asking your best friends for dinner. There is just nothing finer than a handsome salmon, stuffed with a savory filling. It is equally good, crisp and brown from the oven or served cold with a delectable cucumber sauce. It is not essential to remove the heavy back bone but it does make it easier to serve. It is not really difficult to remove the bone. A small sharp knife and your fingers are the only tools needed. First the head off, then insert the point of the knife under the centre bone at the head end. Work down each side with short strokes, using your fingers to press the flesh from the bones. When both sides are loosened from the bones carefully cut around the long back bone, being careful not to cut through the skin at the back of it. Wipe dry and lay open on a large heavy piece of foil.

I like to brush inside with lemon juice before salting and spooning on the stuffing. Place the stuffing on one side only and do not pack too tight. Fold the top half of the fish over the filling. If you are going to bake the fish in an open pan. It is best to tie it together with string at about 4-inch intervals. If you are going to bake it wrapped in foil, tying is not necessary. The foil will hold it together.

Some of us like to serve fish with the skin on. In this case grease the foil well on the sides next to the fish . . . this prevents the skin sticking to the foil and tearing when the foil is removed. If your salmon is to be served cold and glazed then the skin should be removed. It will peel off with the foil if the foil is not greased.

When the children were small there used to be a joke in our family about head." Today's fish stuffing is in this category. The recipes which Mama said were "made up out of her amounts will depend on the size of your fish.

FISH STUFFING . . . for a 3 to 4-pound fish, 3 cups soft bread crumbs (preferably whole wheat), 1 tsp. salt, 1 tsp. MSG (Ac'cent), 1 tsp. summer savory or thyme, a good sprinkle of seasoned pepper, 4 slices of bacon, 2 Tbsp. butter or margarine, ¼ cup chopped onion, ¼ cup chopped celery and 1 peeled and chopped tomatoes. In a bowl put the bread crumbs and all the seasonings. In a hot skillet place the bacon and fry until crisp. Remove bacon to paper towel. Add the butter to the bacon fat in the pan and add the onion, celery and tomatoes. Sauté just until wilted. Add these, including any liquid in the pan, to the bread crumb mixture. Add the crumbled bacon and if desired 2 Tbsp. of toasted and sliced almonds. The almonds are optional but they do add a lovely touch to the dressing. Toss

DEAR HELOISE:

Here is an idea for the times when you have more eggs than will fit into the egg shelf in the refrigerator door:

Remove the eggs from the carton and cut-off the top of the carton. Then trim the bottom half of the carton to the proper size so it will fit into a shelf of the refrigerator.

for door, and you will have a perfect nest for the extra eggs.

Walter Elsiger

Walter, you just went to the top of my "Brain" Net! I removed all the eggs from the egg shelf in my refrigerator, cut the tops off two long, narrow, cartons and overlapped the bottoms of the cartons at the center of the shelf. Now I can put more eggs on that shelf than I could when I used the egg cups in the door!

Another advantage of this method is that you can use these cartons on any shelf of the refrigerator door . . . whichever shelf is the height you like . . . even if the refrigerator doesn't have a molded egg tray.

The cartons cushion the eggs so there is no more rattle and less chance of broken eggs.

They also save having to clean the egg shelf because you can replace cartons when they are soiled . . .

Another thing I found that you can plunk an egg or lime, cut or uncut, into these cartons. Thank you, thank you!

cream. Season with  $\frac{1}{4}$  tsp. salt,  $\frac{1}{4}$  tsp. paprika, a dash of Tabasco and 2 Tbsp. lemon juice. Chill before using. Before serving sprinkle the sauce with chopped parsley.

A perfect go-with for fried or baked fish is broiled tomato slices. Cut the unpeeled tomatoes in thick slices, season with seasoned salt and pepper and sprinkle generously with dried sweet basil. Broil or saute and use as a garnish on a platter of fish. Lemon wedges or circles are a must . . . lemon sharpens the flavor of all fish. Savory butter is also nice . . . just cream together softened butter and your favorite herb or seasoning. Make into pats and chill. Place one on each serving of fish after it is cooked.

It is a question in anyone's mind which a fisherman loves most . . . fishing or talking about it. If successful, they tell in great detail how they caught and landed their catch. If they come home empty handed they tell you why . . . the water was too low or the wind too high; they got there too late or too early; they had the wrong bait or there was too much noise; the really big one invariably got away.

This week I salute all fishermen . . . may the fish you catch be as big as the one that got away.

Bride's Corner

Memo to brides of fishermen . . .

Don't get in a tizzy when your husband plunks a mess of fish down in your kitchen. Learn how to cook the creature.

Damp clean a fish rather than putting it under the tap. Use a paper towel or a damp cloth.

Rub or brush lemon juice over and inside of a fish before cooking it. This adds to the flavor and helps to keep the fish firm.

Add a little vinegar and spice to water when boiling a fish. Actually fish should never be boiled . . . always simmer.

Never overcook fish . . . if overcooked, fish will be dry and tough.

Dry a fish thoroughly before frying. Have the fat sizzling . . . if it sputters, shake a little flour into the fat.

Use aluminum foil on broiler or in pan to avoid "fishy" washing up. When stuffing a fish . . . allow one cup stuffing per pound of fish.

they do add a lovely crunch and a note of elegance to the dressing. Toss all together lightly with a fork.

A very moist baked fish recipe if fish is wrapped and sealed completely in foil.

Make double folds of the foil and pinch the ends tightly to make steam-tight. Place the package on a baking sheet and bake in a hot oven 450°F. Allow 10 minutes cooking time per inch thickness (measured at thickest part of fish), plus an additional 10 minutes cooking time for heat to penetrate foil and fish. Slit top of foil and fold back at end of baking time and run under broiler for a few minutes if crispy, brown top is desired.

Cucumber with fish is a famous food affinity so do have a generously filled bowl of Sour Cream Cucumber Sauce to serve with any fish dish.

SOUP CREAM CUCUMBER SAUCE . . . peel and chop fine one medium sized cucumber, if the seeds are large discard them. Mix with 1 cup sour

DEAR HELOISE:

I believe I have found a timesaver for busy mothers. It seems as though the baby's sheets are always getting soiled at the head of the bed because of dribbling and all. Consequently I seemed to be constantly changing the bed.

Now I spread two doubled diapers sewn together lengthwise across the head of the bed and tuck them in all around. A pad can be put underneath if desired. They can be removed easily when soiled and replaced with clean ones. I thus avoid changing the entire bed so often.

Because the diapers are wide enough to tuck in securely under the mattress, there is no worry of baby pulling them over his face. Sharon Smith

Pilot Sparks Drive To Save Haida

NEWS ITEM:

TORONTO (CP) — A Canada-wide drive was launched (recently) for funds to preserve the famous old Canadian destroyer Haida as a permanent memorial to the Royal Canadian Navy's service of the Second World War.

An immediate objective of $100,000 has been set, principally to build a drydock to enclose the wartime navy's "fightingest ship" in a public display near the Canadian National Exhibition grounds . . .

In a ceremony held at Toronto August, 1964, the retired destroyer HMCS Haida was turned over to Haida Incorporated, a private group which intends converting the old warrior into a memorial museum.

It is appropriate that such a move be taken to save Canada's best-known warship; and fitting that Haida stand as permanent tribute to the thousands who served their country on the high seas for six long and costly years of war.

HMCS Haida has strong ties with this city, for many of her officers and crew were Victorians . . .

Built by Vickers Armstrongs Limited, Walworth, England, 1,900-ton Haida was commissioned in the RCN Aug. 20, 1943. Upon completion of working-up exercises, the new Tribal class destroyer, named after the fierce Queen Charlotte Islands Indian tribe, joined the Home Fleet based at Scapa Flow.

Her baptism of fire was not long in coming. By Christmas, she was part of the escort of a Russia convoy which lured the German battle-cruiser Scharnhorst to her destruction by British heavy warships.

Helped Sink
20 Vessels
In 20 Years

It is ironic that Canada's luckiest destroyer should have met Germany's unluckiest battleship . . .

For the mighty Scharnhorst was felled. During construction, she rolled, crushing 60 workers; during launching, she splintered nearby barges; during the bombardment of Danzig, two gun crews were lost when a turret accidentally exploded, and the other gun crew suffocated when the ventilation system broke down; she sank the mammoth German liner Bremen in a night-time collision. Lastly, in the fatal skirmish with Haida's convoy, a freakish three-mile salvo from British ships stopped her dead in the water. After she sank, only two of her more than 1,000 men reached shore—to die when their emergency oil heater exploded.

Haida next saw action exactly four months later, as a member of the 10th Flotilla, in a skirmish with German destroyers. In Operation Tunnel Haida and consorts cruised the English Channel, sweeping it clear of enemy shipping. One destroyer was sunk, two were damaged. HMCS Haida's brilliant career had begun . . .

Two days later, she single-handedly drove ashore another Nazi destroyer in flames. But the cost was high. A torpedo from another German shattered Haida's companion, HMCS Athabaskan. Athabaskan went down—still firing—with 128 officers and men. Among them was Athabaskan's skipper, Lt.-Cmdr. John H. Stubbs, after whom the Belmont Park elementary school is named.

Earlier, Stubbs had won fame as CO of the old destroyer HMCS Assiniboine, when he rammed and sank a U-boat after a bitter fight.

Blasted by enemy shore batteries, Haida searched throughout the night for survivors. She rescued 28 men, but had to abandon the task at dawn. Four volunteers manned her little motor cutter and continued the search alone, managing to pick up eight more survivors, still driven off by three German minesweepers.

In company of sister Tribal, HMCS Haron, Haida drove ashore yet another Nazi destroyer, her third "kill."

Her extraordinary run of luck continued. Within two weeks, she had participated in depth-charging and sinking the submarine U-671, south of Land's End. The following month, she helped sink two German freighters and an armed trawler in the Bay of Biscay.

In August, 1944, she and other Allied destroyers "almost totally wiped out a convoy of six German ships off St. Nazaire." This was the crowning achievement of her remarkable career.

But Haida suffered her only wound in this battle, when one of her own shells accidentally exploded and killed two gunners.

Soon afterward, she supplied Free French forces with weapons and ammunition, and captured two small enemy vessels disguised as fishing boats.

As the Second World War drew to a bloody close, HMCS Haida operated in Norwegian waters and acted as escort to another Russian convoy.

Ironically, her closest brush with disaster came on her last wartime voyage. During a U-boat attack on the Murmansk convoy she barely escaped being hit by a torpedo. Nearby, HMCS Iroquois underwent the same unnerving experience. A British frigate was not as lucky and sank.

After V-E Day, Haida entered drydock to prepare for action against Japan in the Pacific. But V-J Day passed before she was ready, and she began a much-deserved rest.

Her brief stay in reserve ended, she became one of the principal units of the Canadian fleet on training drills, exercises and cruises.

In November, 1946, she picked up 18 American airmen of a B-28 bomber which crash-landed in stormy seas northeast of Bermuda. The following month, she re-entered drydock for complete modernization. When she again joined the fleet, it was to once more see military action—Korea.

By the time Haida reached Sasebo, Japan, in November, 1952, the Korean War was two years old. Immediately ordered into service with the United Nations forces, Haida shelled Communist North Korean factories, railways and marshalling yards—under the heavy fire of shore batteries. By the end of the first seven-month tour of duty, she had destroyed two trains—adequate proof of her versatility.

Haida steamed 40,000 miles in her 145 days of patrolling with British and American vessels, and fired 3,500 rounds against the enemy. Upon her return to Halifax, she became the second RCN vessel to have circumnavigated the globe. HMCS Nootka was the first.

Most of Haida's second tour was after peace had been signed in July, 1954, and she spent this period in routine patrolling.

The following years saw Haida exercising with NATO forces and, lastly, serving as a training vessel for naval reservists on the Great Lakes. In 20 active years, Haida had served Canada in two wars, participating in the sinking of about 20 enemy vessels, and steamed 400,542 miles.

Haida's hard-won battle honors are:

On October 11, 1963, the venerable destroyer was paid off and turned over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. A brief article in the RCN magazine, The Crowneast, described the touching ceremony:

"... The ship's company assembled for prayers by Roman Catholic and Protestant chaplains, followed by the playing of Sunset by the band of HMCS Stadacona. The White Ensign was lowered, after which Carry On was sounded and the ship's company marched off the ship. Only about 40 of her normal complement of 240 officers and men were on board for the paying-off ceremony.

"Although none among her last complement served in the ship during the Second World War, one man had been with her for about six years, including a tour of duty in the Korean theatre. He is Petty Officer Allan R. MacVittie.

"PO MacVittie first served in the Haida following her refit in 1951, and stayed with her for 18 months. He then served another tour of duty in Korean waters in a sister ship, HMCS Huron. He returned to the Haida in June, 1958, and had been with her ever since."

But the nautical dowager was not to fall to the cutting torches. She owes her eleventh-hour salvation to, of all things, a commercial aircraft pilot, Neil Bruce. Bruce had never seen Haida before being invited aboard for a short cruise on the Great Lakes by his brother Ron, a Sea Cadets officer.

Upon hearing of her daring wartime exploits from her officers, Bruce fell in love with the old destroyer and immediately sparked the crusade to save her.

He recruited several others, many of them former navy men, who in turn convinced others that she could be preserved. When Haida Incorporated came into being, through the free legal work of two lawyers backing the project, Bruce began commuting between his Streetsville, Ontario, home and Ottawa and Halifax. He also has amassed telephone bills that rival the national debt.

The group worked desperately when suddenly informed Haida would be put up for sale right away, rather than in late 1964, as had been expected.

Bruce's supporters visited Defence Minister Paul Hellyer and top ranking RCN officers, including then chief of naval staff, Vice-Admiral H. G. DeWolf. "Hard-Over Harry" DeWolf had been one of Haida's two wartime skippers.

Shortly after, it was announced Haida Incorporated had acquired the ship for $20,000, payable in 10 years. The destroyer was turned over to her new owners at Sorel, Quebec, after being towed from Sydney, N.S.

A Montreal tugboat firm then agreed to tow her to Toronto for $5,000, only two-thirds the regular charge. All expenses were paid by a bank loan.

Three naval officers and 12 reservists then were granted three days' special duty to man Haida on the lengthy tow through numerous canals—at their own expense.

When sufficient funds are raised through public subscription, Haida will be installed in a cement berth in Toronto's Coronation Park, which is dedicated to servicemen killed in the last war. Restored to her wartime fighting appearance she will be opened to the public which sponsored her.

Also to be displayed are memorial-lists of all naval men who fell for Canada in the last war.

If the necessary capital is raised, old HMCS Haida, Canada's "fightingest ship" will be around for generations to come.

THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS IN SHOW MUSIC

By BERT BENNY

When I was out at George Fairfield's pleasant home on Runnymede Place a short while ago, I noticed a fine looking beer mug with an inscription on it.

Being of a rather inquisitive nature, I managed, not, I hope, too ostentatiously, to read the whole message then to discover that the mug was given to George on July 15 of 1951 by the RCMP Band in Regina.

It came to light at the same time that George was given sergeant's stripes and his wife, Irene, an RCMP crest.

These presentations came in recognition of George's services to the band in question. They represented, perhaps, a high spot in George's musical career, now a matter of 38 years in show music.

George was born in Kenora, Ontario, son of a very musical family. His father was a band-leader in the days of the silent movies. His mother was an organist. His five sisters and four brothers were all musical though only one became professional.

GEORGE FAIRFIELD
... a big force music

"I've made music my whole life," says George. "Although you may not believe it, I used to be a first class chef!"

Undoubtedly the kitchen's loss is the platform's gain.

It was a busy life, too. In Regina, for instance, George taught a hundrated students a week, did radio performances morning, afternoon and evening and led the dance band at the "Trianon" for 10 years.

Another Victoria musician of note, the "man with a thousand musical memories," Al Smith used to be a featured star on Radio CKCK in Regina. When Al left to come to Victoria it was George Fairfield who took his place.

And George can—and does—narrate story after story of humorous and unexpected incidents in his full life of music making. One such tells of when the power failed at the organ on which he was accompanying a singer at a wedding. Nothing flustered and only momentarily disconcerted, George quietly moved over to a piano and resumed the accompaniment. The girl singer never faltered either during the change-over or thereafter. Practically everybody thought the whole procedure was something to plan and the result of careful rehearsal.

In his radio work, which included performance on the CBC Western network, George met many of the best known announcers, such as Barry Wood, Freddie Skips and Ross McRae, now of CBC-TV.

Among the highly celebrated musicians with whom he has performed,

George mentions especially Lionel Hampton, Cap'n Eddie Peabody of banjo fame, and Phil Jimmy. He was in Regina for 18 years and came to Victoria in 1954.

Oh yes! As well as being a fine musician and a first-class chef, Mr. Fairfield has his pilot's licence with 75 hours flying time to his credit. However, he deserted the airways some 14 years ago when the family insurance rates were likely to be enhanced by such paternal activities.

The family now has wife, Irene, who plays the piano; 12-year-old George who plays with his school band; 11-year-old Ross who is another pianist; seven-year-old Shari who is a bit young as yet to launch out on a musical career.

Shari's dad, however, started at five years of age and had a good technique at six. At 11 he was playing alto horn with the Kenora Light Infantry band where, during the next two years, he graduated from 4th to 3rd and 2nd and clear up to 1st cornetist.

George and his partner of 30 years, Al Hall, ran a highly successful music store in Regina until they transferred the business to Victoria in 1958.

Ex-Airmen Seek New Quarters

By CYNTHIA BLAIR

Although 20 years have passed since the cessation of hostilities in the Second World War, the spirit of the RCAF still lives on in the City of Victoria through the medium of 800 Pacific Wing of the RCAF Association, a branch of a national organization of ex-airmen and airwomen, comprising wings stretching the length and breadth of Canada, with membership open to all ranks of the Allied Air Services.

The Victoria Wing actually came into existence in 1956 when five or six enthusiastic individuals met with Air Marshal W. A. Carr, at that time president of the national organization, in the Empress Hotel to discuss the possibilities of formation of Canada's most westerly wing of the association.

Two of the original five members who attended this meeting are still active members of the local wing in the persons of Frank Porter and

H. W. "Mac" Engleton, its first public relations officer. Credit goes to the never-say-die attitude of Frank Porter who later became the wing's president, for in the early days he was largely responsible for holding the wing together and continued the drive for membership.

With the disbandment of 265 Aircraft Control and Warning Squadron, RCAF Auxiliary, the Wing received a shot in the arm when the majority of its former members joined. The wing's official charter was presented on June 3, 1961, at a meeting and banquet held in the Monterey restaurant by FFL-44 Ross Rowlands, RCAF liaison officer to the association. Dick Higgins became the wing's first president, and succeeding presidents have been Alce Gibb, Frank Porter, Joe Barlow and present-president Bill Stevenson.

From these small beginnings the wing has passed from a handful of interested members to its present membership of 130—and this figure increases month by month.

Since its inception the aims and objectives of the wing have been to maintain the spirit of the RCAF and to participate in various community affairs, especially in the field of financial aid to charitable organizations.

The first big step in this direction was taken when it was decided to adopt a seven-year-old Chinese boy, Kam Loon through UNICEF. The child was financially supported by members for two years. Financial aid was also given to the Queen Alexandra Solarium, and the Central Paity Association. Recently two wheelchairs have been purchased which are available to the public free of charge. Other donations have been made to the Kaydettes, the female counterpart of the Air Cadets, and the newly-formed city police boys' band.

Regular visits are also made to the DVA Hospital by the sick committee, to ensure ex-RCAF personnel that they are not forgotten by comrades.

To keep the wing operating on a sound financial basis, funds are raised by the various committees through membership fees, the staging of monthly dances, the occasional bingo game and the operation of the teen-age dances.

At these affairs, members of the ladies' auxiliary to the wing have played a prominent part in fund-raising.

For the past two years the wing has entered a float in the annual May 24 parade in Victoria. This year it won second prize in its division, mainly through the efforts of Joe Barlow, immediate past president, and his committee.

Through the generosity of the federal government, and the city police, the wing has been fortunate in having the use of the former Officers' Mess at 1212 Quadra Street for monthly meetings and social functions. However, with such a fast-growing membership, it became necessary to find larger accommodation and a building committee was set up under the chairmanship of Bill Stevenson. Debentures were issued for purchase by the membership and a parcel of land was finally chosen and leased from the provincial government at Blahae Street in Victoria West. It is hoped the first and will be turned in the immediate future. Erection of the wing's own quarters is the culmination of the sustained efforts of the old "diehards" who stuck to their guns in the face of adversity and many frustrations.

This is what proposed 800 Pacific Wing headquarters will look like in its Victoria West location.

They don't build boats as sturdy and seaworthy as they used to, and it's no wonder there are so many drownings these days, says a member of the vanishing breed of old-fashioned boat builders.

Seventy-nine-year-old Darwin Hearn Carter, who recently completed his 717th boat in a small workshop at 801 Goldstream Avenue, specializes in the construction of wooden clinker-built and carvel boat hulls.

Although he realizes his boats are no longer in demand by most sportsmen he continues producing them because he knows that in the "proven and reliable designs of by-gone days" the public is getting "the best and safest craft we can provide."

Boating today is geared for speed. Sports fishermen want light-weight boats which they can transport by car to their favorite fishing ground and in which they can zoom out for a couple hours' fishing and then zoom back and be on their way home again.

They are definitely sacrificing safety for speed, and that is the cause of a lot of drownings," says the veteran boat builder. "The death rate in drownings seems to keep well in line with the modern trend of small craft."

"We find the older type of clinker and carvel construction badly neglected by this modern age of plastic, plywood and all the new fangled ideas of a speed-mad and noisy generation," Mr. Carter said.

"When I view the great number of poorly designed, under-sized and overloaded boats it makes me wonder when will people start considering the tremendous importance of safety?"

"Modern ideas may come and go but the anger of the water never changes, and a trend towards larger and more seaworthy craft is necessary for improved safety among our water-loving population."

There is some demand for old style boats but the trend has gone so far the other way that there are few young craftsmen left to carry on the tradition, says Mr. Carter. He has been building boats for years in the Vancouver area and at many places around Vancouver Island before moving to the Langford area, but who will follow after he is gone?

The first boat Mr. Carter ever owned was an Indian dugout canoe which as a boy he used to paddle up and down the Stave River on the Lower Mainland.

He was three years old when his father, Foster Clyde Carter, moved his wife and two young sons west from the Nipissing district in Ontario, in the fall of 1880. The family got off the train at the CPR's Whonnock Station, and Mr. Carter packed his two sons in a sack on his back along the 10-mile trail to their newly pre-empted 160-acre homestead near Stave Falls.

They built a small log cabin, cleared timber and brush so they could grow food to live on and eventually started cutting and selling timber for a livelihood. Those were the days when a meal sometimes consisted of one egg added to bread crumbs to feed the entire family or a bony woodpecker shot by their father, had when clothes were made of flower sacks and outdoor winter footwear was strips of potato sack tied to the feet with baling wire.

Mr. Carter recalls the day his father took him along on the wagon to get freight from a sternwheeler river boat tied up at the mouth of the Stave.

The family later left the homestead, moving to various places where employment was available, and at about the age of 20, Darwin

Carter signed on as an apprentice at a large shipyard in Vancouver.

He was on his own in a large city, earning one dollar a day for 10 to 12 hours of work per day. While learning the boat building trade at the shipyard, he paid $5 per month for a single room over a bakery near Eighth Avenue—a room which had a tin stove to cook on, a box for a table, another small box for a seat, the floor for a bed and a Bible to keep him company.

The happy but rugged childhood and early encounter with problems of managing on a small income helped Mr. Carter cope in later years with the task of keeping his expenses down while operating boat-building businesses around B.C.

He gets by without the luxury of driving a car, and he usually builds his home adjacent to his workshop, as he did at his present Goldstream Avenue location. "Doing all the work myself, I have learned not to spoil any piece of work, thus keeping costs down more," he said.

A California businessman who passed his place of business last year, several months ago ordered a 14-foot canoe which he picked up on his arrival in June for a vacation in B.C., said Mr. Carter.

"It's worthwhile and satisfying to know the public is getting the best and safest craft I can provide," says the old boat builder.

In addition to this business George still plays numerous public and private engagements and has been the orchestra leader at the Butchart Gardens "Sunset" production shows for the past two seasons. And he's back there this year, too: every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, regular as pie.

"Basically," notes Mr. Fairfield, "I always liked the classics; necessity forced me into the popular music field. I like progressive jazz, too. It's a big force in the music of today!"

Come to think of it, in these parts as, formerly, in Regina, George himself is a big force in music, too!

STORY BEHIND A BOOK

By ALAN WOODLAND
in B.C. Library Quarterly

For the past 35 years Major George Nicholson has lived on the West Coast of Vancouver Island. There is a photograph of him in his book which shows him standing outside his office at Zrhullas and beside him, nailed neatly to the wall, are the shingles representing the various positions he held simultaneously: magistrate, post-master, coroner, mining recorder, registrar, marriage commissioner, air-harbor licensee and wharfinger. Happily he was also an unofficial, local historian.

In 1950, when he was forced to retire because of ill health, George Nicholson took up writing as a hobby and during the next 10 years he published 200 short stories in newspapers and magazines. Most of these stories were about the West Coast of Vancouver Island, about its people and places, about its good times and disasters.

From time to time readers of these stories would suggest that Nicholson write a book using the material they had found so fascinating, and realizing that there had never been such a book, and that if he did not write it much of the history of this part of western Canada would be lost, he went to work to prepare the manuscript and gather the necessary pictures. Though he realized that he might benefit financially from the book, he felt that he would be fully rewarded if he were able to pass on in permanent form his knowledge of the area he loved. He was, as he began the year long task, 74 years old.

Much of the material relating to the lives and exploits of the early explorers and fur traders is, of course, to be found in the provincial archives, public libraries and other scientific and historical institutions but it is thinly spread over many volumes, written by many historians. Major Nicholson's aim was to select and condense this material into a few chapters, "concentrating on the salient facts and omitting the trivia." The remaining chapters of the book could then be devoted to events which occurred later, based on the memoirs of the early missionaries, the experiences of the pioneer settlers, many of whom had been Nicholson's friends, and on his own knowledge and personal experiences. His friendship with many of the older Indians of his time also proved helpful and he found, as others have, that once their confidence was gained they were willing to tell him the stories that had been handed down by word of mouth through the generations.

Living on a war veterans' allowance as he was, George Nicholson had little money to spare. With his allowance and old age security plus what money he had made from the short stories, he had managed to put aside $1,000. Not enough to publish a book. He applied unsuccessfully to the Canada Council and to a private foundation for a grant. They were willing to meet the "cost of publication of a scholarly manuscript"; they had money "for the support of scholarly works"; they could assist with manuscripts "recommended by their panel of experts"; but they could not help George Nicholson. And who can blame them: two eastern publishing houses turned the book down because they considered it too regional, of limited interest, and they did not believe that such a book could be sold for $10 a copy. George Nicholson, of course, disagreed. He considered that he had an interesting story to tell, that he had written an interesting book and that people would buy it. He decided, therefore, that if no one else would publish it for him he would publish it himself. And he did.

Fishermen, loggers, miners (people whom he had lived and worked with), other West Coast residents and a few of his old army friends of both wars came to his assistance. Between them, and without so much as the scratch of a pen, they raised $4,000 in interest free sums ranging from $100 to $500. With George Nicholson's own $1,000 this was roughly the cost of printing the first 1,500 copies. He took the manuscript to a Victoria printing company and in mid October, 1962, received the first printing. Thanks to the help of his friends he was able to pay cash and receive a considerable discount from the printer.

George Nicholson was now his own publisher. It was only a short step to the decision to become his own distributor as well. During the year, while he had been preparing the manuscript and collecting the 100 photographs (which themselves are almost worth the price of the book), he had made a note of people who for personal, business, family or other west coast reasons might well be interested in the book he had been writing. In time a list containing 600 names had been prepared and to each of these 600 he mailed an attractive brochure describing the book, together with a personally signed letter and a blank order form. Incredibly 500 of the people on this first list bought a copy.

The first 100 copies of the book had no index and reviewers were quick to point out this serious omission. Major Nicholson set out immediately to prepare one and it was printed with all later copies. All earlier purchasers could receive it free of charge.

Islander Writer's Book Honored

Ninety-five-year-old James Morton, an old-time newspaperman whose stories sometimes appear in The Islander, has received a new honor. His book, After Ninety, reviewed some months ago on these pages, has been ordered by the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. The book was published last November by Gray Campbell of Sidney and its full title is After Ninety — Birthday and Other Fables of a Nonagenarian.

Mr. Morton was secretary to Premier John Oliver and wrote another book, Honest John Oliver, in which he told the colorful premier's life story.

Mr. Morton is still an active member of the Canadian Authors' Association.

Naturally, it was not long before others began to hear of the book, and the book sellers — who had at first been skeptical of the selling price—had read the reviews, had customers asking for the book and were requesting supplies. Book distributing agencies began to press for copies and suddenly those people who had been concerned with the book from the beginning realized that they had a best seller on their hands.

By early 1963 the first printing was sold out. The costs of printing had been met, all loans had been paid back and the financing of a second printing was assured. George Nicholson realized that if he were willing to distribute the book through established agencies he might increase his sales but selling the book himself was providing him with an interesting and profitable occupation during his retirement. He knew that few writers had ever published and distributed their own books on such a scale but in this instance it was paying off handsomely. He was enjoying the responsibility, the work and the profits.

By October, 1964, the second printing was sold out and in November the printing company delivered a further 1,100 copies. By July of 1965, 3,610 copies had been sold including 750 by the Major himself at $10 each. The remainder had been sold through bookstores.

In discussing this extraordinary publishing event, George Nicholson is the first to point out that many copies of the book were sold in British Columbia, many to the friends he had made during his many years spent in the province, but at least a thousand copies have been sold to schools, libraries and readers further afield in Canada and the United States and overseas.

George Nicholson lays no claim to being a writer and was not in the least unhappy when Robert Browning in a review of Vancouver Island's West Coast in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, said "It must be admitted that Nicholson is not a writer, that he is a recorder (and an accurate one) . . ." It is of the word "accurate" that the recorder is proud. Alan Morley, reviewing the book in the Vancouver Sun, says, "As a document it is superb. Whether or not it is literature is beside the point."

Literature or not, as a do-it-yourself history project that obviously needed to be done it is an extraordinary achievement.

That the publishing houses turned the book down as being too regional is no real fault of theirs. They were, no doubt, working on past publishing experience and probably had a very good idea of the sales normally expected for this kind of book. But as George Nicholson says, "True, it's regional, but to Canadians and Americans, the region under review is of real historic significance and interest, for the West Coast of Vancouver Island, Nootka in particular, is where the history of British Columbia begins . . ." Those Canadians and Americans can thank George Nicholson for an interesting account of the lives and experiences of the pioneer settlers, the lighthouse keepers, sealers, whalers and steamboat men; the rugged individuals who pioneered its present day industries; and those who through hard work and thrift, helped found the prosperous communities which now thrive on this wild and savage stretch of coastline—the men and women who helped open the western gate of Canada.

classrooms for different studies, but they operate after school hours and on holidays, giving extra-curricular instruction to children from kindergarten to 15, thus keeping them happy, occupied and out of mischief. This particular one takes care of 2,000 children, and is operated by a few paid executives and many volunteers. It is also voluntary so far as the children are concerned. It is not compulsory to attend, but evidently they need no urging. We visited all the classrooms, and I was simply amazed at the quality of the culture produced in these various rooms—dancing, vocal and instrumental music, painting, wood carving, radio work, ship models.

On from Shanghai by train to Nanking, and this city is perhaps best known as the burial place of Dr. Sun Yat Sen. His mausoleum, like every other memorial in these countries, is huge, magnificent and perfect. It is a bit tiring on a very hot day to climb the 394 steps to the top of it, but it is well worth it, and helps one to realize why he chose this lovely spot for his last long rest.

My last stop was Peking, which I reached from Nanking by medium-sized plane. Peking I found a hard task master with its many, many hills and steps to climb in order to see what one must, but it's worth every ache and pain, and should be on the compulsory list for all who wish to see the glories of the old and new China combined.

It is still like a happy dream to me that I have really climbed the Great Wall of China as far as any ordinary tourist ever goes, and farther than many of them will attempt. Looking up I felt I could not do it, but with the encouragement of my young guide, and with frequent stops to slow the fast-beating old heart, I was finally able to shout "Eureka" at the top.

The Ming Tomb, the Summer Palace and the Forbidden City are all fascinating monuments to the past, and then, to help one realize the work that is done by the modern Chinese, one visits the People's Great Hall, one of the most wonderful buildings I have ever seen, with its pillarless meeting hall for 10,000 people, with facilities for translating into 12 languages, its 5,000-seat banquet hall, its 20 huge provincial meeting rooms. China is composed of 20 provinces—each decorated with the handicrafts of its particular province. Never have I seen such a display of carvings—ivory and jade—paintings, sculpture, furniture and carpets.

The People's Great Hall was completed in 11 months, opening at the end of August, 1959, for the celebration of the first 10 years of their Liberation, and since all the handicrafts were done at that time it is proof of the artists and craftsmen China still produces.

While in Peking one of my drives took me through the Embassy district, where I was told more than 50 countries are represented. I could not help fervently wishing that my country were among them.

From Peking I flew back by fast jet to Canton, and next day out again by train to the Free World.

Although I travelled alone I had met many other tourists in the various cities—Canadian, English, German, Italian, Australian, Japanese and African. Of course no Americans since their government does not allow them to go to China, which I think is a pity. Several of the people I met had been so impressed with China that they were back for a second visit, so that they could see more of the places that interested them most.

Now to sum up a few of my impressions: When you are told that the Chinese are hungry, unhappy, and dissatisfied with their government, I would advise you not to stick your head in the sand and believe it. Everything is not Utopia, but it is so much better than the common people had it when we of the West were in control that there is no comparison. I saw in the country, particularly one day when it rained, very primitive living conditions, but no effort was made to avoid these on our drive.

Railway stations and airports are decorated with beautiful flowering shrubs in priceless Chinese porcelain containers. Hotels are adequate, but not luxurious by our standards. Food is good everywhere—at least I found it so. European food was always available, but I ate Chinese food throughout my visit and became proficient with chop sticks. Crops this year look excellent, particularly in the beautiful country south of Canton. Here the women, and some of the men, wear the very large hats with fringe pictured in the gay watercolors by Edith Lansdowne, mother of Victoria's famous bird painter, Fen Lansdowne. Colors may not be as bright as in Mrs. Lansdowne's day, but the people are still beautiful and picturesque in the lush green fields.

The people everywhere were extremely friendly, and the guides very intelligent and helpful. One difference I noticed between China and Russia: In the latter country guides are introduced by their first names, and one addresses them accordingly. In China they are presented as "Mr." or "Miss" and we of course use these titles in addressing them. My young woman in Shanghai and my young man in Peking both had the name of Chang, but were not related. I imagine Chang is to China much as Smith, Jones and MacDonald are to our country.

Evening entertainment—music or acrobatics—was excellent and plentiful, although sometimes a bit too much propaganda. They are very bitter at the U.S. actions in Viet Nam and the Dominican Republic, and no one—child or adult—is ever allowed to forget it. An encore in vocal music is practically sure to be a pledge of support against "U.S. aggression" which is the term they always use.

They worship Mao, and are completely dedicated to the collective cause as opposed to the individual. How long this will remain so, one cannot guess. Too many Western visitors may gradually weaken their convictions, but when I hear criticisms of their leadership from our people—always unfortunately from those who haven't been there—I cannot help asking could we or anyone else have done as good a job of raising the hopes and standards of such a huge nation as their leaders have done? And, if so, why didn't we do it?

Go and see for yourself, and I guarantee you will find it more inspiring and satisfying than all the extravagant, high-priced Western Capitals put together.

Victoria Was To Be Boot and Shoe Capital

workmen out at Belmont were heavy in their work, though there were rows now and then, and complaints that too many Chinese were being employed.

In 1874 a smaller plant was started in town, so many were the orders, and it was strange that while some people were complaining about Chinese workmen, much of the prosperity of this business depended upon export of boots and shoes to the Orient.

There was this note in The Colonist: "The Belmont Manufacturing Company have leased the corner store and upper floor of Alhambra Hall, and will convert them to the purposes of their business.

"So that it comes about that the walls within which King Bacchus and Thetis and Terpsichore have held sway for many years will resound with the peevish sound of boots and shoes in the process of manufacture for the children of the Flowery Kingdom."

Two years later, in 1876, the Belmont Products caused a stir at the provincial exhibition: "One of the most striking features... is the admirable display of boots and shoes... the various exhibits were awarded no less than five first prizes. Hampering the youth of this enterprise, we doubt very much whether any province in Canada could have produced a better display, both in regard to workmanship and material."

The Colonist had a pat on the back for this industry, which, it said, "is a distinct advantage in many ways to the province," because "it affords a market for hides, which are 'raised' on the mainland, and it is a consumer of immense quantities of hemlock bark in which our forests abound."

"More than this—it prevents the exportation of good round sums of money for boots and shoes which in years gone by were always purchased in foreign lands."

After this John Switzer's boot and shoe business fades out of the newspapers. I can find no further trace of it.

The Belmont tannery either burned down or was torn down, and J. Roland Stuart, an Englishman of much charm and suavity, and popular with everyone who knew him, built a shooting box and fishing lodge on the property, and it was from Stuart that James Dunsmuir bought Belmont and built his Norman-towered mansion, where once the Duke of Windsor, when Prince of Wales, danced into a June dawn on the terrace looking out to sea and the snow-capped Olympics, and then the war came and Hatley Park became a naval college, and the old tannery of John Switzer was gone and forgotten forever. But what it accomplished remains, sketchily, in print, and so it is part of our history.

Bill Porter Watched Dawson Creek Blow Up

no glass left bigger than a dime. Injured and dying lay everywhere, and these were removed as quickly as possible to a U.S. Army camp two miles away, where there was a medical unit. But seven men of Bill's own crew of 18, who had not been with him at the time, were simply never seen again.

There were, thinks the man who watched that day, hundreds of others blown to bits, lost without a trace. Because there was no way of knowing. It was one of those places which fill up with drifters, lone individuals without kin or ties, who showed up from all parts of the country looking for a job, or for easy pickings in a boomtown. There would be no record of them.

The outside world, says Bill Porter, never heard very much about the Dawson Creek explosion. For one thing, it was still wartime, and the Japanese were giving trouble. For another, it just may have been that the American author-ties felt that carelessness which could result in such an overwhelming fatality is the sort of thing which is just as well not to advertise.

Today Bill Porter seems content with a much less adventurous existence. He is a solidly-built, ruddy-complexioned man with an easy manner and a breezy, colorful way of expressing himself. When not discovering Victoria and its beauty spots on his bicycle, he likes to keep busy in the workshop in his basement. Here he makes just about everything one might expect from an imaginative woodworker, lawn chairs, excellent leaved garden windbreaks, planters, wheelbarrows, toys and many other items. Among his most effective efforts are the house signs which are becoming very popular among home-owners who like their names and the names of their residences hanging from gate or signpost. These he accomplishes according to a special method all his own, and they are most attractive and different. In fact you just may see him busy with these in one of the city's department stores.

He has been a full-time resident in Victoria for some eight months now, and is, I think, very happy with his adopted city. He is sincerely interested in Victoria. I hope it treats him well, because I think he has a lot to give.

PAUL W. H. G. JOHNSON Tells How

A modern photographic lens, manufactured by any reputable firm, is a piece of precision optical mechanism and the product of extensive research and skill. Many photographers do not give their camera lenses the respect or care which will enable the lens to continue to produce sharp and clear images on photographic film.

Today most lenses are "luminized," so that all air-glass surfaces, that is the exterior and interior surfaces of the various lens elements which are not cemented together and are in direct contact with the air, have been coated with a very thin layer of magnesium fluoride. This is done to prevent the unwanted reflections, caused by the phenomena that light beams scatter somewhat when leaving an uncoated glass surface.

Luminizing improves the highlights and to some extent increases the practical speed of a lens. Photographs taken through a luminized lens are sharper and crisper in appearance, because of the absence of many uncontrolled beams of light, which were present in the older type of lens. The coating on a luminized lens is microscopically thin and, although almost as hard as the optical glass itself, like optical glass it is very delicate.

The high polish present on the surfaces of a good lens makes it possible to project clear sharp images. Once this polish has been destroyed, the image will become diffused in proportion to the damage. Often these blemishes will not be visible to the naked eye and the gradual deterioration of the photographic quality of the negatives taken through the lens will go unnoticed. A person so often hears the remark, "I must be slipping or had beginner's luck with my first pictures, because this little camera used to do a fine job, but I don't seem to be able to get the same results now." In most cases the reason for the drop in quality has been the abuse to which the camera lens has been subjected.

The pocket handkerchief or a piece of tissue paper used to clean the surface of a lens is like using sandpaper to polish your best silverware. It is true that a freshly laundered handkerchief and a clean fresh piece of tissue are very soft, but the tissue or handkerchief usually used on a lens is one that has resided in a gritty handbag or pocket.

The air is full of dust. Some particles of this dust are so fine that they go entirely unnoticed, although they may be hard, sharp abrasives. When such dust settles on your camera lens and you rub it off with any material, there is a great danger of scratching the glass. Before any attempt is made to wipe the surface of the lens, first remove all dust with a soft camel's hair brush and make sure that this brush has been kept in a case, so that it is perfectly clean. An even safer and better method is to buy a large rubber ear syringe from the drug store and use this as a hand bellows to blow the dust away.

When you have removed all the apparent dust, take a piece of lens tissue and gently wipe the lens with a circular motion. Before doing this, breathing on the lens will aid in lubricating its surface and removing any film or haze. When you have finished using lens tissue, if it is not of the lint-free type you may find very fine particles of the tissue fibre remaining. This can easily be blown off with the ear syringe.

It should seldom be necessary to use lens cleaning fluid and you should avoid doing so when this is not required. However, should the lens become cloudy after it has been exposed to a smoky or oily atmosphere, or if a finger has accidentally touched the surface, put a drop of lens cleaner on a lens tissue and gently wipe the surface before very carefully polishing with a dry tissue. Do not use any compound or lens cleaner that has not been made by a photographic lens company for this purpose. Many lens cleaners sold for cleaning eye glasses would be harmful to a delicate coated photographic lens.

Whatever you do be sure to keep your fingers off the surface of the lens. Recently when looking over the stock at a photographic dealers, I saw one lens worth several hundred dollars that had been ruined. Some person had accidentally touched its surface and his fingerprint had etched right into the glass. Perspiration contains chemicals which will eat into optical glass if allowed to remain on it any length of time.

Sometimes dust will gradually blow in through the shutter mechanism and stick to the inner surfaces of the lens. Or vapor may enter and cloud this area. Never take a lens apart to clean it. This is a job for a qualified camera repairman. When lenses are put together at the factory, they have been accurately assembled with the correct tensions and positioning and any tampering with the lens element mounts can throw this out of adjustment.

Internal vapor clouding between the lens elements, or for that matter, outer surface clouding is often the cause of out-of-focus pictures. A person sometimes does not notice the slight amount of vapor on these

TO CHOOSE AND USE a Photographic Lens

surfaces, especially when they are very interested in the picture that they are about to take and if the vapor happens to be on the inside of the lens, the result of using a lens in this condition is a photograph that looks as though it was taken through ground glass.

A way to avoid this common error, is to make sure that your lens has become acclimatized to the surrounding temperature before using it. Quite often the camera has been kept in a cool place in a tent, car or other location and then the photographer takes the camera directly into a hot, humid atmosphere with the result that excessive condensation takes place. If a photographic filter is left on over the lens, in many cases it will be found that there is considerable condensation between the filter and the lens, when the camera has been carried in varying temperatures, so check this point before taking a photograph.

A good lens has had many corrections embodied in its manufacture. Cheap lenses suffer from ailments such as spherical aberrations, coma, astigmatism, curvature of field, distortion and chromatic aberration in most cases. These are natural optical faults, which are very expensive to correct. Frequently a person, when buying a camera, will be misled by the speed of a lens. Some will choose a camera with an f 1.9 or an f 2.8 lens in preference to one with an f 3.5 or f 4.7 lens, feeling that the faster lens is more valuable, especially if the chunk of glass is bigger. Don't judge the value of the lens by its speed. Optical glass is relatively cheap and the f speed value of a lens is merely a measurement, showing size of aperture in relation to focal length. It is the precise corrections built into the lens that give it quality. In choosing a lens, buy those manufactured by well-known companies who have a reputation for turning out quality merchandise.

A considerable number of these higher speed lenses, even of reputable make, are not as well corrected or as sharp in definition as those of more conservative aperture. Also, each lens has its aperture of greatest clarity and definition and this is usually in the neighborhood of f 6.3 or f 8, sometimes even f 11, so why get an ultra speed lens and then have to stop it down to obtain the best results. Of course, in many instances the type of work for which the camera will be used will make a fast lens necessary, but even with very slow film the percentage of pictures taken at these larger apertures is very few.
